Discovers U.S. Unable to Meet British Tariff

New Schedules Such That Americans Cannot Impose Countervailing Duties Under Existing Laws—Senators View Britain's Action as Retaliatory but Say They Cannot Object

WASHINGTON, Nov. 21 (AP).—The United States is watching British tariff moves to determine whether duties levied there should be matched by increases in American rates. A hurried study of the new British schedules today disclosed that thus far the London Government has imposed no tariffs that can be the basis for retaliatory action.

Commerce Department investigators reported that none of the articles on which countervailing duties are permitted by American law was included in the new British list on which a rate of 60 per cent of value is levied.

NONE ON BRITISH LIST
Under the law certain rates may be increased to equal foreign duties. These include levies on automobiles, trucks and bicycles, except trucks, coal, coke, paper board, wall board and pulp board, including cardboard and leatherboard and gunpowder. None of these items appeared in the official lists of the British tariff. Experts immediately began to figure what amount of trade would be affected by the duties, and turned up some astonishing matters. For example, in 1930 British china were valued at $12,270,000. Vanishing and other creams to the amount of $217,000 vanished on the famous complexion of the British female, who also used lip-sticks and cosmetics in the sum of $190,242.

PAPER TRADE HEAVY
More serious than the duties to be placed on these articles were those upon paper and paper manufactures, a trade of $3,000,000 a year, upon typewriters valued at approximately the same sum, and upon vacuum cleaners and radio sets running upward toward the million-dollar mark in each case.

Chairman Smoot, who presides over the Senate Finance Committee, whose name the Senate Finance bill bears, said, "Before the fight is over we will find our present tariffs are none too high and, in many cases, may have to be advanced."

COMPLIMENT RETURNED
Senator Blaine, another Wisconsin Republican, said, "We gave them the first dose and they are just returning the compliment."

Representative Hawley, Republican, Oregon, co-author with Smoot of the present law, could see no retaliation involved. He added the new Congress "certainly will not take part in a tariff war."

FEMALE BANDIT GANG IS ACTIVE

Vancouver Police Receive Two Reports of Holdups by Women

VANCOUVER, Nov. 21.—Possibility that a female bandit gang is operating in Vancouver was examined by police on Saturday afternoon following the report of Mrs. Betty Straughan, Haro Street, that she was kidnapped by two women and robbed of $20.

It was the second case of the kind reported to police, and detectives are making an investigation.

Mrs. Straughan reported that at 1 p.m. on Saturday she was walking to her residence and stated that Mrs. Straughan's mother had met with an accident. She asked Mrs. Straughan to accompany her and together they took a street car to Granville and Georgia Streets.

There they waited for two blocks, where an auto was waiting with another woman at the wheel.

WAS THROWN TO FLOOR
One of the women seized Mrs. Straughan by the wrist, threw her to the floor and the car drove away. The women drove to a garage, which Mrs. Straughan could not identify, and there demanded that she sign a letter asking her mother for a sum of money. When Mrs. Straughan refused, she told police, the women bound her hands and feet and left her in the place.

LEFT VICTIM ON STREET
Later they returned and robbed her of $20. Then they put her in the car and drove to Cordova Street, near the C.P.R. station, where they told her to descend and drove away. She made her way to the police station to report the robbery.

Mrs. C. R. Sampson, mother of Mrs. Straughan, passed waiting on Robson Street and saw her daughter get on the street car with the unknown woman.

B. C. GRAZING RULES ALTERED

Greater Measure of Control for Stockmen Ratified by Government

Amended regulations with a far-reaching effect on the grazing of livestock in British Columbia, and in the conservation and better control of the ranges, were ratified by the Provincial Government yesterday, by order-in-council. It was announced by Hon. N. S. Loughheed.

The regulations, in reworded form, repeat the main body of original rules, and make a number of specific additions, to give more authority to stockbreeding agencies in the keeping of the ranges, providing for ten-year grazing permits in settled areas, and going far to bring harmony into the age-old problem of unfenced Crown and private lands.

BETTER RANGE CONTROL
Mr. Loughheed explained the regulations were drafted after full conference with the stockbreeders, and embody the text of the practical requirements stated by these groups throughout the province. In particular, it is believed, they will give a better measure of control over the wild horse menace, under which large numbers of wild animals have invaded cattle and sheep pastures, and worked great damage on fenced lands by the destruction of fences.

Under recent legislative changes additional means of control were set up to curb this menace, and the present change in the regulations will implement this by giving greater authority to local stockbreeders.

PRESS JOINS IN GIVING WELCOME

Pictures of Rt. Hon. R. B. Bennett Adorn Front Pages of London Newspapers

LONDON, Nov. 21 (CP).—Newspapers today joined in greeting Prime Minister R. B. Bennett of Canada, who reached here yesterday on the first leg of a health trip which will take him to the south of France.

Pictures of the Canadian Prime Minister's arrival and stories of his expected meeting with Rt. Hon. J. H. Thomas, Secretary of State for the Dominions, adorned front page news columns of morning papers.

The Morning Post in an editorial said: "The privileges already given the Dominions in the Antidumping Act are once more evidence of our intentions. We feel sure that no Dominion, least of all the Dominion of Canada, will fall short of our hopes when we talk over prospects and enterprises which must depend for their success and permanence on the old-fashioned principle of give and take."

Fish Meals of Province Have Opening in Europe

If quality and price requirements can be met, British Columbia manufacturers of fish meal can develop a new market for part of their products in Denmark, where fish meal, mixed with other ingredients, is enjoying increasing use for the feeding of cattle, hogs and chickens. It is pointed out by the Provincial Information Bureau.

Denmark exported $161,000,000 worth of animal products in 1929, and $141,000,000 in dairy products. Fish meal is imported to sustain an extensive and well-ordered system of dairy and mixed farming, the amount of Danish imports in this product in 1931 being $411,000, more than 50 per cent of which entered from Norway.

Canadian haddock and whitefish meals are practically unknown there, but dealers in Denmark are said to be of the opinion that British Columbia fish meal should be able to compete successfully in that country, where use of similar product is growing.

Institute of Pacific Relations Council Discussed Modified Agenda at Shanghai

Returning from the conference of the Institute of Pacific Relations which was held at Shanghai, where a modified agenda was discussed when it was found impracticable to carry out the original schedule and meet at Hankow, a number of the Canadian and United States delegates will arrive in Victoria this morning aboard the Ss. Empress of Japan. Among those returning are: Hon. Vincent Massey, Mrs. R. A. McWilliams, Winnipeg; William Birks, Montreal; E. Savard, Montreal; Professor McKenzie, Toronto; Mr. and Mrs. C. J. Burchell, Saint John; Mr. and Mrs. Lionel Curtis, Professor G. M. Smith, Professor P. M. Rieley, A. O. Gibbons, Mr. and Mrs. W. G. S. Adams, all of London; C. A. Bowman, Ottawa, and Miss A. G. Constable and Miss C. Porter, both of New York.

When the Japanese council of the institute expressed its regret that its members could not participate in the conference of the Pacific council during the latter part of October and early November, the delegates attending, representing Britain, Canada, Australia, China and the United States voted unanimously to proceed with the arrangement for the conference, but in a modified form and emphasizing the scientific and research aspects of the institute work, leaving other matters in abeyance.

HAS RESPONSIBILITIES
In arriving at the decision to hold the conference, the council felt that in the event of its being postponed it might be hard for the institute to assume its serious responsibilities.

Six Lives Added to Mine Toll

DONCASTER, England, Nov. 21 (AP).—The number of deaths resulting from yesterday's mine explosion at the Bentley Colliery, near here, was increased to twenty-four today when six of the injured men died in a hospital.

Sixteen were brought dead from the pit of the mine after the explosion and two died shortly afterward. Five men are missing. The mine is one of the largest in Yorkshire.

About a thousand men were below the surface when the blast occurred. Hundreds of them were temporarily trapped by roof falls but eventually succeeded in escaping. An influx of gas followed the explosion, setting fire to the mine.

Lieutenant-Governor of Province and Premier Request People of British Columbia to Generously Subscribe to New Issue Opening Monday

IN connection with the Dominion Government's "National Service Loan of 1931," which is to be open to subscription on Monday, Hon. J. W. Fordham Johnson, Lieutenant-Governor of British Columbia, and Premier S. F. Tolmie have issued statements of appeal to the public:

HON. W. A. GORDON REACHES COAST

WILL Attend Convention of Canadian Institute of Mining and Metallurgy in Vancouver

VANCOUVER, Nov. 21.—Hon. W. A. Gordon, Federal Minister of Mines, reached Vancouver on Friday night on his second visit to the Coast as a minister. Friends took him in charge shortly after his private car arrived at the hotel and whisked him away for a week-end in the country. He will return on Monday.

Mr. Gordon's visit is primarily for the purpose of attending the convention of Canadian Institute of Mining and Metallurgy, which will open in Vancouver on Wednesday. He will remain in the city until the end of next week. He will speak at a luncheon meeting of the Board of Trade on Wednesday. On his way to Vancouver, Mr. Gordon visited Trail, where he was guest of E. G. Blaylock, general manager of the Consolidated Mining & Smelting Co.

With the minister came Dr. Charles O'Connell, deputy minister of mines; George Bateman, secretary of Ontario Mining Association; Fraser Reid, of Hovey Gold Mines, Ltd.; M. F. Fairlie, of Mining Corporation of Canada, and M. J. Cullen, ministerial secretary.

Canton National Congress Makes "Martial Gestures"

MUKDEN, Manchuria, Nov. 21 (AP).—A major concentration movement is being carried out by the Chinese military authorities, Japanese army headquarters reported today. One of the concentration centres, it was reported, is Tungliat, west of Chinchiatun. Three trainloads of infantry arrived from the Peiping-Tientsin area yesterday, according to the Japanese military intelligence, and cavalry troops also are reported to be participating.

STEEL TARIFFS MAY BE LEVIED

More Orders Under British Antidumping Act Expected Next Week

LONDON, Nov. 21 (CDN).—The Board of Trade has not been idle in using the powers given it by the "Abnormal Importation Act," which passed the House of Lords only at 5 o'clock yesterday. Number one of the order under this act published last night contains a list of goods on which from next Wednesday a 50 per cent ad valorem duty will be levied.

The total value of those goods imported during the first ten months of the current year is $21,000,000. The United States share in the import duty of those goods in 1930 is roughly $2,500,000.

MORE ORDERS NEXT WEEK
Heavy industries are not included in yesterday's list, but further orders are expected early next week. The Conservative leader, Stanley Baldwin, in a speech held last night, hinted at early steel tariffs.

Lord Hailsham, the Government's principal speaker in the House of Lords yesterday, answering the urgent Conservative appeals for the Government's early action in order to protect the British farmer, said that only because the Antidumping Bill is a provisional measure it did not include agriculture. Before six months elapse, however, the Government would lay constructive schemes for agriculture as well as other industries before Parliament satisfies agriculture's champions in both Houses.

Urges Support of National Service Loan for Dominion

Lieutenant-Governor of Province and Premier Request People of British Columbia to Generously Subscribe to New Issue Opening Monday

IN connection with the Dominion Government's "National Service Loan of 1931," which is to be open to subscription on Monday, Hon. J. W. Fordham Johnson, Lieutenant-Governor of British Columbia, and Premier S. F. Tolmie have issued statements of appeal to the public:

GOVERNOR'S MESSAGE
The message of the Lieutenant-Governor is as follows:

"The Government of Canada is making an appeal to the people of Canada to show their faith in the future of our country by subscribing as liberally as possible to the National Service Loan to be issued on Monday."

"The present trade depression has forced every Government in the world to face unusual conditions. In better times it was an easy matter to float loans in the outside financial centres of the world, but at the present moment the rates of exchange make this a most costly procedure."

"The Dominion Government loan is a national one, and I appeal to the patriotism of Canadians to subscribe to it as liberally as their means will allow and thus assist the Government in meeting the emergency."

FIGHTING FROST

Prostrate caused more Japanese casualties than did enemy bullets in the fighting Wednesday in the Angangchi-Tailu area. A casualty list published by the Japanese army headquarters showed that of a total of 450, the frostbite victims numbered 300.

In the engagement thirty-one were killed, 104 wounded and thirteen are missing. The Japanese would not hazard a guess of Chinese losses but believed them to be heavy.

On arriving in Tailu the Japanese thoroughly searched the city for a private who had been captured after being wounded by the Chinese in the fighting at the Nonin Bridge early in November. They were unable to find him.

It was learned that when the fighting started Wednesday this private was bound to a pillar in a

WILL CONSIDER INVESTIGATION

China Agrees to Study Japanese Proposal if Put in Writing

By P. I. LIPSEY, JR.
(Copyright, 1931, by the Associated Press)

PARIS, Nov. 21 (AP).—The most recent League of Nations Council was able to accomplish today in its attempt to effect peace in Manchuria was to obtain an agreement by China to consider a proposal for an investigation under League auspices.

Kenichiro Yoshizawa, the Japanese delegate, proposed that an investigation be conducted through official channels proper as well as Manchuria. The League approved the inquiry so far as Manchuria is concerned.

CLINGS TO POSITION
Dr. Alfred Sze, Chinese delegate, tenaciously clung to his position that examination by the Japanese troops be made a prerequisite to any investigation.

The Japanese delegate announced his Government was prepared to withdraw its troops from the treaty zone as soon as it was assured that the property and lives of its nationals were safe. On the surface this exchange seemed to restore the situation to the status of September 30.

Japan's proposal for an inquiry covering all China was made at a public meeting of the council. It contained no reference to the Tokyo Government's frequently reiterated demand for recognition by China of the validity of existing Sino-Japanese treaties.

MORE CONCILIATORY
The omission was looked upon by League officials as an indication Japan was adopting a more conciliatory attitude. Hope was rekindled that a peaceful solution of the conflict might be found.

The meeting was adjourned with the understanding that the Japanese proposal would be put in writing in order that it might be studied by the Chinese delegation.

The suggested Manchurian inquiry received the approval of the council delegates from Great Britain, France, Italy, Poland, Jugoslavia, Norway, Guatemala, Peru, Panama and Ireland.

THE IMMEDIATE TASK
Germany's delegate, Gerhard Meisner, said he thought the League's immediate task was to end the hostilities in Manchuria rather than to attempt to deal with the Empire Chinese problem. Alejandro Lerroux, of Spain, agreed.

Government Acts By Implementing Staff Reduction

Ten Employees in Lands Department Receive Notice as First of General Policy of Retrenchment in Services Is Set in Motion

ACTUAL retirements from the permanent staff of the Civil Service, in addition to a gradual and slower process of elimination that has been carried on since last Spring, were officially announced by Hon. N. S. Loughheed yesterday, affecting approximately one-third of those whose services are to be dispensed with in the Department of Lands. Ten members of the department, employed in general administrative, water and forest branches, received notices late Friday, to become effective at the end of the month.

These men, Mr. Loughheed stated, were part of the permanent staff of the Civil Service, and adjustments in regard to superannuation would be made in individual cases. The reduction in the department, it was intimated, had only begun, and further retirements would have to follow in due course. The number of such further retirements was not announced.

FIRST TO ACT
The Department of Lands has been the first to take action under the Government's general policy of economy in the reorganization of internal and external services. Other departments are expected to follow suit, though to what extent has not yet been intimated.

"It must be remembered," said Mr. Loughheed, "that considerable economies have already been effected by this department this year. In addition to reduction in water and land surveys, there has been a saving of $125,000 in the miscellaneous votes, and a saving of $75,000 in wages paid to temporary employees used in the annual fighting of forest fires."

EXTENSIVE SAVINGS
"Notwithstanding the addition of the railway belt and other new lands added to our jurisdiction this year, the department has effected a saving in administrative expenses of $268,701, under this head alone, over what it heretofore cost the Province and the Dominion to administer these areas."

"In addition to the retirements now to be carried out, the Lands Department eliminated fifteen positions earlier this year, eight in the

MASSING TROOPS
By JAMES P. HOWE (Copyright, 1931, by the Associated Press.)
TOKIO, Nov. 20 (AP).—Military authorities were aroused today by reports that China is massing 50,000 troops in the neighborhood of Chinchow.

The concentration, Mukden information said, is taking place under the orders of General Jung Chin, chief of staff for Chang Hsueh-Liang, deposed Governor of Manchuria.

The reported troops movement was cited as one reason for Japan's opposition to an armistice, put at the same time there were indications the government might agree to truce under certain circumstances.

If the armistice were made conditional on the cessation of anti-Japanese activities in China proper as well as an end of armed hostilities in Manchuria, it might be acceptable, it was said.

SAY LEAGUE REMISS
Government officials, however, declared the League of Nations was remiss in not issuing a strict warning to China after Japan notified the League a week ago of the danger of hostilities in connection with the concentration of General Mah Chan-Shan's troops at Taitshar.

The war office announced that on Tuesday units of the army telegraph corps and of the automobile corps will leave for Manchuria. These troops were described as replacements rather than reinforcements.

SAFEGUARDING MEASURES
In view of the reported Chinese concentration on Chinchow, militia authorities said they were preparing for a possible attack on the South Manchurian Railway, which is operated by Japan. Measures are being taken, it was said, to safeguard Mukden and other points along the railroad.

Tokio declared that if armistice without restrictions was accepted, there would be nothing to stop the Chinese from massing their troops wherever they wished. Then, it was said, Japan would be laid open to the charge of violating the truce in the case the Government felt compelled to remove such menaces.

HERO DENOUNCED
Kenkichi Yoshizawa, who was hailed as a national hero a month ago, when, single-handed, he faced the League Council in defence of Japan's position, was denounced today because of reports from Paris that he had agreed to the erroneously announced armistice. In some quarters it was urged that he be replaced by Tsuneo Matsuura.

DISCOVERS U. S. UNABLE TO MEET BRITISH TARIFF
Representative Collier, Democrat, Mississippi, in line for the chairmanship of the House ways and means committee, said the British move was "just another evidence of retaliation."

IS HER BUSINESS
Senator Watson, of Indiana, the Republican leader, said, "I always have believed that sooner or later Great Britain would have to come to the protective tariff. This is her business."

Senator Robinson, of Arkansas, Democratic leader, said he did not know how much effect the British move would have on American commerce, but to what extent it was influenced by enactment of the Hawley-Smoot tariff law in this country.

Five persons were arrested by police in a raid on the Olive Rooms, 644 Commercial Street, last night. Those arrested were Minnie Hill, alleged keeper; Dolly Brown, Sue Campbell, Joe Young and a youth under age. All were charged with being found in a disorderly house.

SEEKS MORE ADVENTURES

that will be permitted or which I can secure," he answered when queried as to how he expected to get about in Manchuria, if allowed to go there.

Mr. Gibbons is also very uncertain as to what the hostilities, at present continuing so merrily, may amount to by the time he arrives on the other side of the Pacific. It may be that the war spirit may have spent itself and hostilities in the field be at an end. On the other hand, he ventured the suggestion that world war on a gigantic scale may be only commencing. He visualized 400,000,000 Chinese allied with Russia, with 150,000,000, and possibly East India, with another 300,000,000, or half the world's population, possibly arrayed against any other combination.

While he hoped such a situation would not materialize, there was, he felt, a possibility of its development. "I am anxious to get to work as a reporter again," he said, and he had been questioned with regard to his activities in the radio field.

That is what I was brought up to; that is what I am, and I hope people think I am a good one. It is now three years since I have had the opportunity to engage in the work I like best, and I am impatient to get at it again. I am tired of being a microphone weevil, and want to do some real work once more."

LIKES RADIO AUDIENCE
In the radio field, however, he has had his pleasures and rewards. The radio audience, he feels, is a very personal one. The listeners in their kitchens, in their parlors, or in the various parts of the day appear to be very close to the radio talker. "I have no small regret at parting with them," he stated.

He went on to tell that his listeners entered very heartily into the relationship that was created. He receives many letters with queries and well wishes constantly, and reading his correspondence takes considerable time, but he never fails to read all of them. As he spoke, several letters were delivered by a ship's boy. Among them, one being shaped like a ship, bearing across it the embossed words, "Bon Voyage."

"That is just like them," he said, "they never forget you."

MAY CONTEST REEVE'S SEAT
Ratepayers Approach Frank Cooke to Become Candidate in Esquimalt

Stating that he had been approached by many ratepayers of Esquimalt to stand again for the position of mayor, Frank Cooke, president of the Esquimalt Board of Trade, was last night undecided on his future plans for the municipal elections in January.

In his interview with the Colonist, he said, "I have been approached by a large number of ratepayers to offer myself as a candidate for the reelection. I am in favor of a flat rate to citizens, such rate to favorably compare with that paid by residents in the present mill rate of taxation."

"I am in favor of a salary of the mayor being reduced to $3,000, and I would recommend that the number of aldermen be reduced from ten to six, their remuneration remaining as at present."

"I oppose the expenditure of $25,000 upon publicity."

CIVIC GRANTS
"I oppose any further civic grants being made without the expressed approval of the taxpayers."

"In view of the present economic conditions I strongly urge that extended time be granted for the payment of delinquent taxes to those in real need of such assistance."

"In my opinion the greatest problem which the new council will have to face will be that of the alleviation of distress caused by unemployment. Both the unemployed and the taxpayer must be protected, and it will be my earnest endeavor to bring about a solution of this difficulty."

"In the past I have endeavored to encourage fair and honest conduct of all branches of civic administration. If elected I pledge my efforts toward the maintenance of an open and business-like conduct of city government."

FILES PAPERS
Mr. Wakeman, whose home address is 306 Edward Street, filed his nomination papers yesterday and was the first of the candidates to officially notify the city clerk, who is the returning officer, of his intention to place his name on a ballot paper. Mr. Wakeman's nomination was proposed by Police Commissioner Dorothy North and seconded by R. D. Fraser.

The Victoria Ratepayers' Association candidates will hold a meeting in Victoria West School on Monday night, commencing at 8 o'clock.

PREMIER'S STATEMENT
The statement of Hon. S. F. Tolmie, Premier of British Columbia, follows:

"The Dominion Government is inviting subscriptions towards the National Service Loan of 1931. This is a domestic loan, and the whole of the money realized from the subscriptions will stay in Canada. The interest of the loan will be circulated throughout Canada for the benefit of Canadians."

"Interest on Dominion Government bonds from 1901 to 1913 ranged from 2.89 per cent to 3.86 per cent. This loan will return an interest on your investment for the five-year loan 5.17 per cent, for the ten-year loan 5.13 per cent. Your subscription, therefore, will enable you to serve, while receiving a handsome return on your savings. All the wealth and income of the country is your security."

"Apart from the intrinsic value of these securities, it means a support to the Government of Canada in order to relieve the stress and stimulate business."

"The call to invest is a personal one. Every Canadian should take advantage of this splendid opportunity to not only improve his own position, but to loyally assist his country to stimulate business and to expedite industrial activity."

S. F. TOLMIE, Premier.
Under Sir Charles Gordon, chairman of the national loan committee at Ottawa, subcommittees were formed in each of the provinces composed of leading citizens to assist in placing the facts of the national loan to be opened tomorrow, before the public. The Lieutenant-Governor, with Premier Tolmie and a group of representative citizens, is actively in support of the loan.

John Burns, the first working man to become a cabinet minister in England, recently celebrated his seventy-third birthday.

Candidates for City Council Announce Platform for Municipal Campaign

The campaign committee of Victoria labor organizations has announced the policy on which Charles Chivers and Joseph Casey, the two candidates endorsed by the Trades and Labor Council, will stand. The platform, given out yesterday is as follows:

1. The maintenance of standard wages and conditions in all public works.

2. The closest co-operation between the City Council and all dependent spending departments such as the School Board, the police department and the Library, etc.

3. The elimination of loss in management of unemployed relief works, and the maintenance of a high standard of efficiency.

4. The better distribution of the work of intermunicipal services.

5. The application of the strictest business principles to the various civic departments with a view to elimination of overhead and the curtailment of the tax rate.

The two nominees, Charles Chivers and Joseph Casey, are well known among the ratepayers of Victoria. In submitting their platform to the electorate, the members of the committee stated: "Experience shows that public bodies composed entirely of men drawn from big business and financial bodies have been more extravagant than bodies truly representative of the community. If the city is today facing financial difficulty, it cannot be because there is any dearth of business men. We believe that all sections of the community shall find representation."

MAY ENTER CONTEST
Thomas Humphries, well known business man and leader in young people's work, is being urged to become a candidate for the school board. He has also been asked to enter the aldermanic field. So far, he has not made any announcement, except to say that he will not be a candidate for alderman. Mr. Humphries is a candidate for the school board two years ago and polled a considerable vote. He is keenly interested in educational matters. He is to announce his decision within the next few days.

ANNOUNCES PLATFORM
Edward James Wakeman, who is running as an aldermanic candidate, announced his platform last night as follows:

"In presenting myself as an independent candidate for election to the board of aldermen of the city of Victoria, I desire to state my position with respect to some of the questions of public interest which I believe should receive the early attention of the incoming council."

"I am in favor of there being no further reduction of the rate of wages paid to civic workmen."

"I shall oppose any increase in the present mill rate of taxation."

"I am in favor of a flat rate to citizens, such rate to favorably compare with that paid by residents in the present mill rate of taxation."

"I am in favor of the salary of the mayor being reduced to $3,000, and I would recommend that the number of aldermen be reduced from ten to six, their remuneration remaining as at present."

"I oppose the expenditure of $25,000 upon publicity."

CIVIC GRANTS
"I oppose any further civic grants being made without the expressed approval of the taxpayers."

"In view of the present economic conditions I strongly urge that extended time be granted for the payment of delinquent taxes to those in real need of such assistance."

"In my opinion the greatest problem which the new council will have to face will be that of the alleviation of distress caused by unemployment. Both the unemployed and the taxpayer must be protected, and it will be my earnest endeavor to bring about a solution of this difficulty."

FILES PAPERS
Mr. Wakeman, whose home address is 306 Edward Street, filed his nomination papers yesterday and was the first of the candidates to officially notify the city clerk, who is the returning officer, of his intention to place his name on a ballot paper. Mr. Wakeman's nomination was proposed by Police Commissioner Dorothy North and seconded by R. D. Fraser.

The Victoria Ratepayers' Association candidates will hold a meeting in Victoria West School on Monday night, commencing at 8 o'clock.

CITY APPROVES RELIEF WORKS

Adopted by City Council—Awaits Acceptance

At a fifteen-minute session of the City Council yesterday morning final approval was given to the city's unemployment relief programme, amounting to approximately $300,000, which has been accepted by the Provincial Government and sent forward to the Federal authorities for adoption. Substitution of the programme yesterday followed a conference between City Engineer F. M. Preston and officials of the Public Works Department of the Provincial Government and Federal Government representatives, resulting in the acceptance of the city's undertaking with minor alterations.

CONTINUE EMPLOYMENT
Under the programme approved yesterday, the city will be able to keep in employment all married men now on the payrolls until the third week in January, it was stated by City Engineer Preston. Government officials were opposed to only one item in the programme of works and that was the construction of the thirty-inch feeder main for the waterworks system, which called for a heavy material expenditure. A compromise, however, was reached, and an amount of $25,000 was transferred from that item to the thirty-inch main job, and under that arrangement the Government will only pay one-half of the remaining $50,000 for materials.

DIVISION OF COST

Under the new plan the city will pay for its work until January 23 for relief $129,262.50, the Provincial Government will pay $45,737.50, and the Federal Government $150,000. The items are as follows: Macadam, $30,750 labor; $50,250 materials; sewers, $17,200 material, $36,800 labor; surface drains, $9,100 material, $17,900 labor; thirty-inch feeder main, $60,000 material, $44,000 labor, and twenty-inch main, $23,000 labor.

The amended programme was telegraphed to Ottawa yesterday afternoon and approval is expected early next week.

Radio Message Picked Up
by Liner States All on Board Are Well

LONDON, Nov. 21 (AP).—The steamship Alameda Star radioteled today she had picked up a message from a sailing canoe in the Atlantic, bound from Hamburg, Germany, to New York, giving the canoe's position as latitude 38° N., longitude 20° 35' W., a position somewhat southeast of the Azores.

The message, which is believed to have come from Fritz Engler, who sailed October 14 from Hamburg in a rubber boat, said all aboard were well.

Engler is a second officer of the Hamburg-American Line. He claimed his boat is unshakable and expected to reach New York in seventy days by way of the Canary Islands and the Bahamas.

SWEDISH MONEY VALUE SLUMPS

Government Urged to Put Emergency Tariffs Into Immediate Effect

By WILLIAM H. STONEMAN
(Copyright, 1931, by The Chicago Daily News Foreign Service)
STOCKHOLM, Nov. 21.—A condition described by the Swedish press as "chaotic" has developed in the Swedish money market during the last week, culminating yesterday in a new slump of the crown to 20.25 cents, the lowest figure it has reached since the suspension of the gold standard last September.

The decision of the Riksbank to issue foreign exchange only upon the presentation of documents proving the existence of foreign obligations now compels all Swedish business men to wait until the documents are received before they can secure foreign currency. This has resulted in considerable confusion and loud protest from all corners of the country.

CALL FOR PROTECTION

The newspapers join in calling upon the Government to put emergency tariffs into immediate effect in order to stem the drain on the crown, and accuse the Government of laxity in handling the money situation.

At the same time there is a firm conviction that the crown is the property of the nation and that it will right itself when the world situation is somewhat calmer.

BEGIN TO WONDER

While the Riksbank has attempted to regulate the money bourse by establishing the official rate of 18.15 crowns to the pound, yesterday's quotation in London was 18.50, and financial experts are wondering how long the Riksbank can stand the pace.

Lack of sufficient police apparently contributed largely to the confusion in the Scandinavian money market. An example is to be found in Denmark, where despite the Danish law against exportation of Danish currency, enacted last week, frontier officials do not even ask travelers leaving Denmark whether they have Danish currency in their possession.

POLICE COMBING COAST FOR BOAT

Searching for Burglars Who Robbed Land Postoffice and Made Escape by Water

VANCOUVER, Nov. 21.—Provincial Police officers are combing the waters of the lower British Columbia Coast for a boat in which they suspect burglars fled after breaking into the postoffice and store of Thulin Trading Co., Ltd., at Lund on Tuesday.

A large quantity of miscellaneous goods and provisions was taken from the store, also $15 from the cash register. The postoffice was looted of $20 and some stamps.

Entry to the premises was effected by breaking a padlock on a door to an unoccupied room adjoining a warehouse. The burglars then crawled under some shelves and removed an inner door, after latching the hinges. Two sets of footprints were seen in the snow the following morning. They led towards the water.

The P.M.C.-3, with officers aboard, started north from Vancouver today. The P.O.D.-3, carrying constables, has left for the scene from Powell River.

Twenty-One Demands Made by Japanese Are Outlined

By LOW CHIEF
Chinese Central Committee Member.

Manchuria is far away, and is a Chinese territory, and it may be, on the surface, said that Canada is not in any way directly or indirectly in China's troubles. Yet, if we study the details and look sufficiently ahead, we will find ourselves not only interested but almost vitally so.

To anyone who has read "A History of the Far East in Modern Times" by Harold M. Vinacke, Ph.D., which can be obtained at the Victoria Public Library, it would be unnecessary to call attention to the seriousness of the situation created by Japan in the furthering of her ambitions not only at China's but the detriment of those who have not read this book, and who have not been in touch with the inner history of the Far East in modern times. It may be of interest to your readers to call attention to the more salient points of the Japanese demands.

EARLY AMBITIONS

Japan's ambitions in Manchuria started as long ago as 1894-5 when, as a result of her successful war with China, she demanded the cession of the Liaotung Peninsula in Southern Manchuria. She was forced to withdraw at the "invitation" of Russia, Germany and France. Ten years afterwards she fought Russia over Korea, and took over the lease of Port Arthur and the Southern Manchurian Railway.

As China became, through increasing warfare, weaker, Japan's ambitions became wider. She supplied arms and munitions first to one side, then to the other, and at times to both sides, always on terms which are calculated to give her a stronger grip on China. Her purpose was to keep up the turmoil in China, and to prevent any united front from being formed. She might be called, by the Powers, to take control; but failing that, she was careful to take advantage of every opportunity to force her way into China which will strengthen her position and her grip.

MANY TREATIES SIGNED

Japan has signed many international treaties, under which she, together with other signatories, undertook to preserve the political integrity and sovereignty of China, but all the time she has been feathering her own nest, to wait for the time when the other Powers should be so preoccupied that any action Japan may take might go unchallenged.

Posting as an ally of the group opposed to Germany in 1915, she took advantage of the preoccupation of Europe and America by imposing upon China a treaty under threat of military action directly by herself, and of supporting men who are refugees in her country to attack the then Government of China under Yuan Shi Kai. He yielded to force and signed the agreement which gave Japan the right to establish a railway in Manchuria. This was not approved by the Parliament of China at that time, nor has it since been approved.

CONTROL OF CHINA

When Yuan Shi Kai was overthrown, the new Government refused to recognize the treaty that was forced on him under threat of war, and the treaty has never been recognized by any Chinese Government since that date.

This is the treaty with the famous "Five Groups and Twenty-One Demands" terms of this treaty, if given effect, would have meant the complete actual control of China, though nominally she would still be said to rule. As the treaty has been much in the public eye lately, owing to its having been mentioned several times by the Japanese Ambassador at the League of Nations, it may be well to publish just what the terms are.

This outline of conditions under which Japan secured the signing of the treaty: the status of Yuan Shi Kai as entirely unrecognized by the Parliament and the details of the negotiations, which created such a furor among foreign correspondents when Japan denied such negotiations were in progress, is taken from a book written by Professor Vinacke.

THE FAMOUS TREATY

The treaty of 1915 and its twenty-one demands is as follows:
Article 1. The Chinese Government will give full assent to all matters upon which the Japanese Government may hereafter agree with the German Government relating to the disposition of all rights, interests, and concessions relating to the Province of Shantung.

Article 2. The Chinese agree not to alienate any territory within the Shantung Province or islands along the coast to any foreign power on any pretext whatever.

Article 3. The Chinese agree to let Japanese build the railroad from Tientsin to the Kiauchow-Chinan railway lines.

Article 4. The Chinese agree to open additional places for foreign residence and trade in the Province of Shantung, but as to the places to be opened, the matter will be dealt with separately.

GROUP TWO

Article 1. The two contracting parties agree that the lease of Port Arthur and Dainy, and of the terms of the Southern Manchurian Railway and the Antung-Mukden Railway agreements shall be extended to ninety-nine years.

Article 2. The Chinese Government agree that all Japanese subjects shall have the right to lease land for commercial and agricultural purposes in Southern Manchuria and Eastern Inner Mongolia. (As other foreigners are denied this right, it gives Japan a privileged position and is contrary to Japan's "open door agreement.")

Article 3. The Chinese Government agree that Japanese subjects might reside, travel, and engage in business in South Manchuria and Eastern Inner Mongolia.

Article 4. Japanese subjects shall have the right to open and operate mines in Southern Manchuria and Eastern Inner Mongolia, but as to what mines shall be opened, the matter may be considered later.

Article 5. The Chinese Government agree that she must first obtain the consent of the Japanese Government on the following matters: (a) That if China should seek foreign capital for railway construction in Southern Manchuria and Inner Eastern Mongolia, in the future, she must first make application to Japan. (b) That if China should wish to use the levies and incomes from the above two mentioned territories as security for loan from another foreign power, application should be made to Japan first.

Article 6. If China should find it necessary to employ foreign financial, military or political advisers, she must obtain the approval of Japan.

Article 7. The Chinese Government agree that the control and management of the Kirin-Changchun Railway should be turned over to the Japanese Government. The time limit begins with the signing of this agreement and terminates ninety-nine years hereafter.

GROUP THREE

Article 1. At an opportune time in the future both Governments are to make the Han Yeh Ping Company a joint enterprise. Without the approval of Japan, China cannot confiscate the properties and privileges of the company, nor can the company be free to do anything for itself.

Article 2. The Chinese Government agree that all (other) foreigners be denied the right to work any mines in the neighborhood of those operated and owned by the Han Yeh Ping Company, unless the company gives its consent; nor are such (other) foreigners, lacking such consent, to be permitted to undertake any mining operations might directly or indirectly affect the interests of that company.

GROUP FOUR

The Japanese Government, with a view to safeguarding the integrity of the Chinese Empire, hereby inserts a special clause as follows: The Chinese Government agree that all of her coastal ports, bays, rivers, and seas be conceded, or leased to any foreign power or powers.

Article 1. The Central Government of China must employ effective Japanese advisers in political, financial and military matters.

Article 2. All Japanese hospitals, consulates, educational institutions, etc., shall have their respective property rights.

Article 3. Hitherto Japan and China have had many disagreements regarding affairs, and because of this it is necessary that the organization of the police force in important places shall be jointly controlled. In these places the police force must employ a number of Japanese to improve the Chinese organizations.

Article 4. China must purchase a fixed amount of munitions of war (50 per cent or more) from Japan, and China must establish Chinese-Japanese jointly worked arsenals, employing Japanese experts and Japanese materials.

Article 5. China is to surrender to Japan the right to build the Wuhan, Kiangsu, Nanchang railway lines, and the Nanchang, Hanchow, Chichow railway lines.

Article 6. China is to build railroads, open up mines and construct harbors (dockyards included) in Fukien Province. If foreign capital is needed for these purposes, China must consult the Japanese Government first of all.

Article 7. Japanese subjects shall be given the right to spread religion in China.

TREATY'S EFFECTS

The treaty gives Japan practically control, except in name only, over Manchuria and Inner Eastern Mongolia, which is but a step to the full control of the outlying provinces of outer China. By supplying money, arms and ammunition first to one war lord and then to another, Japan could gradually extend her rule.

Manchuria is rich in iron and coal, both of which Japan must have if she is to be able to carry out her ambitious plans. Apart from iron and coal, Manchuria is extremely rich in agricultural wealth. Through the control of Shantung, which is also rich in iron, Japan could extend first her influence and later her control to the adjoining province by the same methods, taking in eventually the Provinces of Shanai and Honan. The control of Fokien Province gives her the complete command of the Straits of Formosa, and makes the Yellow Sea a Japanese lake, and through Fokien her influence could be extended to Kwangtung, Kiangsu and Fujian. What Japan is seeking is the control of the whole of the trade market of China, a market which the world, since the Great War, has come to look upon as providing the possibilities of recovery from the effects of the Great War.

PLANS WELL LAID

Japan's plans have been well laid. In 1915, taking advantage of the preoccupation of the Powers who have interests in China, she forced upon China a treaty which gives her exclusive privileges which are denied to any other country, and in 1915 she has again taken advantage of the world's preoccupation in its economic troubles in trying to enforce what she obtained in 1915.

It may be said that China alone is the sufferer, that it does not concern other people. Canada and the Pacific Coast of the United States have been worried by the prospect of the Pacific as the future market for products, as population and industries on the Pacific Coast increase.

With Japan in control of China, whether openly or disguised as "advisers" to the Chinese Government, what chances will there be of that market being otherwise than reserved for Japan? Look at the trade of Korea and Formosa, and even Manchuria, her treaties to observe the "open door" notwithstanding Japan's policy has been that of free trade with her neighbors, and high protection against outside people.

Unable to carry out that policy thoroughly in Manchuria because of the "open door" treaties, she has nevertheless found means of evading her treaty obligations through her control of the railway and the police.

DEMAND INSISTENT

Japan is now at the League of Nations demanding the full five points, including the twenty-one articles. She has plotted well and accomplished fact. Who is in a position to drive her out? Obviously not China, and if China were compelled to secure help from Russia by agreement to join the Soviet system, what then? In desperation, if forced to recognize that the League is but a talking machine, she might do anything. Then what of the future? With the wealth, present and potential, of China reserved for Japan alone; independent of the

That these thoughts are already very much in the Japanese mind is evidenced by the book by Lieut.-Gen. Kikokatsu Sato, which is being translated and published by The Seattle P.I. Canada's immediate concern is the prospect of losing the potential markets of China, and in the more distant future, say a decade or two, in her own political situation.

Why Pay High Taxes?

BY EX-ALDERMAN E. S. WOODWARD
Mayorality Candidate and Advocate of Substantial Tax Abatement

Radio Addresses Every Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday, at 7:45

I STAND FOR:

- 1—Substantial tax abatement through debt consolidation. My plan of debt consolidation will receive the assent of the ratepayers, the legislature and the bondholders. It does not involve selling new bonds on an unfavorable market.
- 2—An aggressive forward policy with a view to filling our vacant spaces, inducing population and broadening the basis of taxation.
- 3—A business-like redistribution of the cost of inter-municipal services. Victoria ratepayers are at present paying many times their fair share of such costs. Unemployment relief will cost Victoria anything from 5 to 10 times as much as Oak Bay.
- 4—A well conceived industrial programme to furnish opportunities of employment to the graduates from our schools.
- 5—The stoppage of all leaks in unemployment relief work. The work should only proceed on the strictest business terms.
- 6—Investigation into the high-cost of commodities and services in Victoria as compared with Vancouver. This inquiry should save Victorians hundreds of dollars yearly.
- 7—Conversion of dormant assets into cash with a view to further tax reduction.

I believe in the future of Victoria, and in the ability of its people to surmount difficulty, and in their determination to discharge their obligations, and in their tenacity of purpose in the fight for better terms, better prices, better payrolls, better services and better homes.

There Is Less Difficulty in Marching Forward Than in Slouching Back

MICHAEL CAMILLE

That the work being done by the British Columbia branch of the Canadian Forestry Association, which bears the name of Junior Fire Wardens, is being praised by the younger element in the community, is constantly being manifested. Charles Wilkinson, manager of the association for British Columbia, has received a letter from a Junior Fire Warden, Michael Camille, of Hooner, which bears the name of Junior Fire Warden, which tells of the good work being done by the younger element in the community. An instance is recorded of a young boy who, by his prompt action had a fire combated which might otherwise have been the cause of heavy loss.

LETTER FROM WARDEN
In part, the letter of the Junior Warden reads as follows:
"I am going to relate to you my experience with fires this year. I was wishing for a fireless season, but it seems the fire was raging fiercer than any other year I've experienced. It surely is a shame."

"I was away on Saturday to the town, Fernie, but my brother, a lively little fellow, saw huge clouds of smoke rising about three miles away from here. What the fire was doing was surprising to many around here. He ran quickly to the hotel, where a telephone is installed, and told the nearest person about the fire that could be seen in the distance, although no one else had seen it. Help was soon called for, and the fire was extinguished after a fight of nearly six hours. The fire destroyed many young trees, but it surely could have been worse. I was at this fire, the first I experienced, and then I went to another almost sixteen miles away from here."

PRINCE INTERESTED
The Prince of Wales, who is president of the Empire Forestry Association, has taken a great interest in the development of Junior Forestry Wardens by the Canadian Forestry Association as young and eager guardians of the woodlands, the fish and game resources. In a letter to Robson Black, manager of the association, Lloyd Thomas, assistant private secretary, wrote on behalf of His Royal Highness:

"The attention of the Prince of Wales has recently been drawn to the work which has been performed by the Junior Forestry Wardens of Eastern Canada and by the Junior Fire Wardens in British Columbia."

"His Royal Highness, as president of the Empire Forestry Association, has learned of this development with the greatest pleasure, and he will be glad if you will convey to the Junior Wardens of the Canadian Association an expression of his appreciation of their enterprise, and his best wishes for their prosperity and for the success of their labors."

MOTHER AND SON PERISH IN FIRE

Thirteen Trapped in Toronto Tenement—Father Rescues Two Children—Is Overcome by Smoke

TORONTO, Nov. 21 (CP).—Despite frantic efforts by the husband and father, Mrs. Thomas Booth, twenty-five, and her five-year-old son, Thomas Booth, Jr., were burned to death in a fire which trapped thirteen people in a tenement at the corner of Clinton and College streets today. The two people were injured in the blaze.

Thomas Booth and his sixteen-month-old son, George, were injured. The latter so seriously he is not expected to live. Another member of the Booth family, Ronald, three, was rescued by his father uninjured. The mother was alive when brought from the building, but died a few minutes later. After he had rescued the two younger children, Booth had his five-year-old son in his arms when he was overcome by smoke and forced to let go.

There were three families in the building, and with the exception of those dead and injured, all escaped in their night clothes.

PLANS ANNOUNCED FOR ATTEMPT TO SALVAGE WRECK OF LUSITANIA

on the project. While it is considered that as the Lusitania lies eight miles out at sea, and therefore in a sort of "no-man's sea," the permission of the British Admiralty is not essential, nevertheless, Mr. Lewis said, the approval of that body, as well as that of the Liverpool and London War Risk Association, were being sought, if not for anything else, as a matter of courtesy.

The wreck of the Lusitania, Mr. Lewis said, is regarded as abandoned property. The liner was sunk in 240 feet of water, and investigations have shown that the wreck is in an upright position, making salvage operations less difficult. A buoy marks the spot where the ship sank.

"We hope to have divers on the wreck within two months," said Mr. Lewis, "and we expect that the salvage work will be completed in another two months at the most."

SPECIAL VESSELS
He added that the expedition will use a specially-constructed trawler and launch for the operations. Of the articles recovered, he said, it was expected that several, especially of historic interest, will be placed in museums.

The tube, which was invented by Mr. Lake shortly before the outbreak of the World War, was to have been used for the salvaging of the British frigate Lutina in the English Channel. It is now at Brightlingsea, England, following a series of deep-sea tests. It is five feet in diameter, but the observation chamber is eight feet wide, and capable of holding several persons at the same time. Both American and English divers, Mr. Lewis said, would be employed in the work. He estimated that the greater pressure would be approximately 45 pounds, and that divers would be able to work without difficulty.

EGYPT IS DEEPER
The salvage vessel Artiglio II, which has been on the sunken liner Egypt, had far more serious conditions to meet. The Egypt lies in 400 feet of water.

The Lusitania was torpedoed at 2 p.m. by the German submarine U-20, Commander Walter Schwieger, and sank in eighteen minutes. A number of other salvage attempts have been announced during the past two years, but no action has been taken.

Sever women members of the Glasgow, Scotland, Council were suspended at a Council meeting after the police had been called to quell a disturbance during a debate on unemployment allowances.

What Today Means

"SCORPIO"

If November 22 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 9 a.m. to 11 a.m., from 3 p.m. to 4:15 p.m., and from 7:30 p.m. to 9:30 p.m. The danger periods are from noon to 1:30 p.m. and from 9:30 p.m. to 10:30 p.m.

Young people will find the helpful hand of Fortune assisting them today—November 22—and the fulfillment of some pet desire will probably take place. A minimum amount of risk will be attached to journeys. Spiritual teachings will be received with more than the usual interest, and spiritual leaders will find the astrological influences inspirational.

Children born on this November 22 will have fertile minds and they will be able to win many scholarships in their school work, if they feel the urge to do so. They will not, however, be ambitious and you will prefer play to work. Experience will be their best teacher and necessity their kindest master. They will have good physical stamina.

Born November 22, yours is a very simple, very lovable nature. Your virtues and your faults alike are openly exhibited to the world. People must take you as they find you for you make no false pretences. Without being vain, you are satisfied with yourself, and you do not worry about what the rest of the world thinks. Your frankness is often disarming, but you must speak your thoughts, and it is not within you to deceive. Your actions always give you away if your words do not.

You have high ideals about honor and the principles of good living, but your material ambitions are modest. Given comfort, you are physically content. Idle hands do not worry you, but an idle mind does. You are always seeking food for the brain, and your mind is full of interesting knowledge, much of which will not be of practical use to you. You are an intelligent conversationalist and you love to talk. You will meet with more success in the social world than in the commercial field.

You are a born mimic, much to the discomfort of your friends, when you are in an entertaining mood. You are more imitative than creative in your work. You are rather inclined to follow the road of least resistance in most things, but you are no feeble fighter when your dander is aroused.

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 22 "SAGITTARIUS"

If November 22 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 9:40 a.m. to 11 a.m., from 3 p.m. to 4:10 p.m., and from 10 p.m. to 11:30 p.m. The danger periods are from 1 p.m. to 2:30 p.m. and from 7:45 p.m. to 9 p.m.

Unsettled conditions are augured for this date. Fixed habits will be disturbed, traditions will be uprooted, and you will be jerked out of the armchairs of the past to face vital matters of the moment—an unpleasant revelation of something which will prove to be a blessing in disguise.

Astrological influences will tend to make the child born on this November 22 emotional, receptive, meditative and imitative. Its feelings will be deep-seated, and it will be very sensitive to criticism and afraid of other people's opinions. There will be a slight tendency to indecision.

Born on November 22, you are very much a creature of habit, and you enjoy a routine life, traveled along the same rut, from day to day. Anything which takes you away from your chosen circle, favorite pastimes, preferred haunts and customary round of duties is upsetting to your equilibrium. You make no attempt to keep up with

RAILWAY TO LINK GERMAN ISLAND

OSLO, Nov. 21 (CDN).—A project which was envisioned 120 years ago by a fighting Swedish king will be realized when a railway embankment is built between the German Island of Reugen and the town of Stralsund on the mainland. Carl Johan XIV, the former Napoleonic general, Bernadotte, who founded the present Swedish royal house, crossed this same stretch of water 118 years ago with an army of 20,000 men, in an effort to outflank the army of Napoleon, his former master, who held the left bank of the Elbe.

In order to safeguard his army in case of retreat he ordered his engineers to build a pontoon bridge between Stralsund and Reugen. This bridge lay over the same course which will be taken by the new embankment. The latter, for business rather than sentimental reasons, will be partly financed by Sweden.

When M. Hatfield, a Hillview, Australia, soldier settler, lost all his poultry and equipment by fire recently, his neighbors stocked his farm with 600 chickens and helped him build new buildings.

POSTMEN SATISFIED

TO LECTURE ON STARRY KINGDOM

Dr. C. S. Beals Will Address Astronomical Society at Victoria College Tuesday Next

The spiral nebulae, and the position which they occupy in the relativity universe of Einstein, will be the subject of an address to be given by Dr. C. S. Beals before the Astronomical Society Tuesday evening next at Victoria College. The subject of the lecture concerns what is probably the most amazing development of astronomy in recent years, namely, new discoveries concerning the spiral nebulae and their connection with theories of the origin and evolution of the universe.

Dr. Beals will show that the sun and the Milky Way are parts of a huge swarm of stars, which is roughly disc-like in form, and which is slowly rotating on its axis. Outside the boundaries of this swarm are many other similar swarms or spiral nebulae, as they are called. These nebulae are scattered throughout space in immense numbers, and it is calculated that from thirty to 100 millions can be photographed by modern telescopes. Each nebula is a universe in itself and contains millions or even billions of stars, each one of which is a body as large or larger than our sun.

STUDY VELOCITIES
A careful study of the velocities of these nebulae has shown that they are all receding from us as though the universe as a whole were expanding. Strange to say, such an expansion of the physical universe had been predicted on the basis of Einstein's relativity theory before it was observed by astronomers. Also the rate of expansion observed was almost exactly that predicted by theory. This fact has been hailed by many as another great triumph for the theory of relativity. Others hold opposite views, and the matter is not yet fully decided.

Dr. Beals will review the present position of the subject and give the views of Eddington, Jeans and the other famous scientists who have attempted to apply relativity theory to the solution of this problem.

"Ponchos" Replace Coats

"PONCHOS" made their appearance in Toronto when Mrs. A. L. Ross (right) and Miss Anna Glasier were photographed on one of the main streets, wearing two of the disguised blankets. Holes are cut for the head and the blankets bound around the neck with satin. They are slipped over the head and wrapped around the figure. Mrs. Ross is wearing a "poncho" of dark green with apple green plaid and Miss Glasier's is in royal blue.

The order was signed by Walter Runciman, President of the Board of Trade.

TEMPERATURE RISE EXPECTED

Gradual Return to Milder Weather Here Forecast by F. Napier Denison

A gradual return to milder weather can be expected after today, F. Napier Denison, director of the Gonzales Observatory, declared last night in announcing that a new low record in temperature for the year was set early yesterday morning. The mercury dropped to 16 degrees below freezing point, but since then the temperature has been gradually rising.

This condition was general throughout the province and, what was more important, the temperature was rising over the Yukon Territory, which area affects the climate of British Columbia to a considerable degree.

The forecast for the next thirty-six hours is generally fair weather and higher temperatures, Mr. Denison said. The Southern Pacific Coast, however, is experiencing a major storm. High winds, accompanied by rain, are sweeping in from the Pacific across California.

Generally these storms are prevalent over the North Coast, but weather conditions at the present time seem to be the reverse of what is usual, Mr. Denison stated.

Ucluelet-Long Beach

Mr. S. Alexander has returned after a short stay in Port Alberni.

Mr. K. Miller, who has been away for several weeks, returned to his home in Ucluelet.

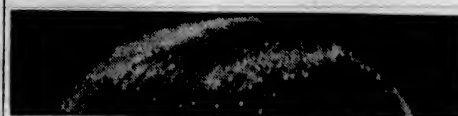

Mr. McNeil, of Comox, is spending a few weeks in Toquart.

Mr. and Mrs. F. Garrard were recently in Ucluelet en route from Port Alberni to their home in Toquart.

Mr. and Mrs. W. Hillier were at home recently to their friends on the occasion of Mr. Hillier's birthday. The evening was spent in cards.

MT. DOUGLAS P.T.A.

The newly-organized Mt. Douglas Parent-Teacher Association will hold a five hundred card party in the High School auditorium on Friday, commencing at 8:15 o'clock. A cordial invitation is extended to all.

ONE DAY'S DANDRUFF

LAZY GLANDS

A fastidious clean body; a scalp that's a scandal. The white shame of American women. Dandruff!

Get rid of dandruff. Anyone can. And no one can ever hide it. In its secondary stage, the infested scalp sheds enough dead scale to fill a tablespoon every twenty-four hours!

And a simple treatment will end this disgusting condition!

Dandruff is caused by lazy glands that won't open and close. They need stimulating. You can do this with your fingertips, dipped in Danderine, to dissolve the gum that has fouled the pores. The worst caked scalp will soften under this massage. There will not be a speck of dandruff after one application.

Do not neglect lazy glands, or the scalp will granulate and leave the hair dry as straw—and as dead. Even its color is affected when roots are starved, and telltale streaks must be "touched up." If you will only stimulate the glands you won't have to use color restorers.

Glands that stay open are just as bad! Hair and scalp get oily and odorless—oil and smell-up hats. Danderine is a positive corrective of this evil condition. It's a real medicine for sick scalps. And its fresh fragrance makes it a delightful thing to brush through the hair as the finishing touch to head daintiness.

And if you doubt that Danderine makes hair grow—measure the length after using one thirty-five cent bottle!

Changes Required in Missionary Colleges' Policy, Report Urges

Commission on Indian Education Advocates Extension and Research to Meet Crisis of Lessening Attendance and Efficiency

A CRISIS faces the Christian colleges in India that demands a complete change of policy. This is the conclusion reached by a commission appointed by the International Missionary Council, headed by the Master of Balliol, and including two Indians, two Britons and two Americans, who submit their report in the recently published volume, "Christian Higher Education in India."

Despite devoted work on the part of the college staffs, "accompanied under Himalayas of difficulty" (to quote the report), the forces of circumstances are lessening the attendance and also the quality of education. Bearing directly upon the colleges is the return on patriotic grounds, to the practice of Hinduism, a return which is sometimes religious and sometimes artificial. There is also secularism, the assertion that all religions are equally false, or that half-way house which asserts that all religions are equally true.

The fact is, according to Dr. Garfield Williams, the British weekly, that the new leadership of India, and in particular the youth movements which influence it, are frankly, though not aggressively, sceptical of the value of religion. The general environment in which the mission colleges are working is disharmony—disharmony within Hinduism, Hindu-Muslim antagonism, and antagonism to Western peoples.

RADICAL PROPOSAL
Three possible solutions are considered in the report—persistence in the existing system, withdrawal from higher education in favor of other methods, and the establishing of a Christian university or universities. These are all held to be unsatisfactory. It is certain that the Christian college supplies an element which neither Hinduism nor Islam nor Government can ever supply.

The change proposed is really revolutionary. In a word, it is the setting up in every province a department of extension and research with the most important Christian college in the province. By research is meant the study of how the Christian gospel is related to Indian religions and the secular influences; and also study of how the Christian church can learn to meet the social and other tasks that confront it. This research must be directed by facing the actual needs of the community.

This departure would require co-operation and combination among the colleges, rearrangement, and reinforcement of existing manpower. Not the Indian, but all missionary colleges are involved. It is stated: "In urging action on the lines of the report, The British weekly puts the issue thus: 'The great heart of the foreign missionary enterprise is as good as ever it was. But what of its mind?'

Be slow to ridicule and scorn. For haste may give you cause to mourn."

—Old Mother Nature.

Billy the Mountain Goat, whom Farmer Brown's Boy called Billy Surefoot, stood for a long time on a narrow ledge near the top of a great cliff looking down on Farmer Brown's Boy on a slope far below. Then he climbed up over the edge of the cliff. Not far away, lying down, he found Mrs. Surefoot, whose name is Nanny, and their only child, Kid Surefoot. Kid Surefoot somewhat awkwardly scrambled to his feet and ran to meet his father.

"I was looking for you," said the latter gravely. He is always grave. "Well, now that you have found me what do you want of me?" inquired Kid Surefoot, somewhat pertly, for he was just at that age when he thought himself very smart and lacked proper respect for his elders.

"I want you to come with me. I have something to show you," replied Billy in that grave manner of his.

"I have just told you that this one is harmless, but the next one may have a fire stick and he would be dangerous even as far away as that fellow is," replied Billy. "So if you would live to grow a beard heed what I say and lose no time in getting out of sight of any Man you may happen to see, and in climbing where he cannot follow."

Kid Surefoot promised that he would heed this advice, but there was still scorn in his look as he watched Farmer Brown's Boy struggling up over the rocks. "Such a way to climb!" he muttered.

The next story: "Kid Surefoot Remembers."

ANOTHER DIES FROM BITE OF MAD DOG

WASHINGTON, Nov. 21 (AP).—The death today of Naval Machine Gunner's Mate Harold Basil Leonard, of Des Moines, brought to four the rabies fatalities resulting from attacks by a pet dog ambugled aboard the U.S.S. John D. Edwards in Philippine waters last month. The Navy Department was informed of Leonard's death at the naval hospital at Canacao, Philippine Islands. Eight other men bitten or scratched by the dog on October 16 are still under treatment at the Canacao hospital.

"What made you a millionaire?" "Curiosity had a lot to do with it. I wanted to see if there was any income my wife couldn't live beyond."

"Yes," replied Billy, "excepting when climbing. That is what is called Man and Man in the one enemy you have most reason to fear. Take a good look at this one so that you will never fail to recognize one when you see him. That is what I brought you down here for."

"Do you think he has one of those terrible fire sticks?" asked Nanny anxiously. Of course she meant a gun.

"No," replied Billy. "I saw him at close range. He is harmless." He took care not to tell how he had been surprised napping by Farmer Brown's Boy.

"What is a fire stick?" asked the Kid.

"It is a stick that only Man ever carries and it flashes fire and makes a loud noise and from a long distance throws something that hurts and sometimes kills. So whenever you see one of these two-legged creatures get out of sight as quickly as you can. Get a rock between you and him and don't be the least bit curious about him," replied Billy more gravely than ever, if that were possible.

Meanwhile Farmer Brown's Boy was scrambling over the rocks as he tried to climb to a point where he could see better. Kid Surefoot watched him slip and slide and scramble. "Pooh! I don't see anything to fear from that fellow!" he exclaimed scornfully. "Look at him. Did you ever see anyone so clumsy? Why he couldn't get near

ALTERATION IS MADE TO HOTEL

Stephen Jones Opens Empire
Coffee Shop After Remodeling of Interior

Something unique in the way of a dining place has been provided by Stephen Jones, proprietor of the Dominion Hotel. This is the Empire coffee shop which he has just opened, and which has been finished in a style which makes the name Empire suitable. Finished in a restful shade of old ivory, the decorations of the room carry with them a most restful atmosphere. The work of decoration has been carried out by R. B. Roberts, whose artistic bent is everywhere in evidence throughout the room.

The idea of Empire is ever present throughout the decorations. The doorway opening to the main dining-room can be shut off with panels so as to conceal all thought of there being a passage way. The idea of an old English inn is recalled with the painting of one of these resorts, and opposite it Dr. Johnson in a chair before the fireplace, with the inscription: "A chair in an inn is a throne of felicity—Dr. Johnson."

The paneling in the upper part of the walls is reminiscent of the autumn maple leaves in their colors, charmingly surrounded by oak leaves and acorns. Mr. Roberts has painted in the various panels scenes including a hunting scene in which the rider is being served in front of the old inn with the stirrup cup, Windsor Castle, Lake Windermere in England, Mount Stephen in the Canadian Rockies, Shakespeare's home at Stratford-on-Avon, local Vancouver Island homes, embracing a scene in Beacon Hill Park.

PLEASING EFFECTS
The lower parts of the walls are finished in a damask tapestry effect. With the leaded glass from each side and electric light fittings blending, the whole effect is most pleasing. With modern facilities for serving quick meals at the mahogany counter, which occupies a niche on one side of the room, there is accommodation for some fifty guests in this Empire coffee shop.

Provision is made for the placing of an orchestra when required in an attractive gallery.

The lounge room of the hotel has been redecorated in keeping with blending colors, while the ladies' parlor alongside has been finished in warm amber tones with lights to match.

Mr. Jones is optimistic with regard to the coming season and is carrying on, in preparation for it, a general renovation of the Dominion

Widow who Wondered why Her Joints Would Not Work

THE REASON— AND THE REMEDY

A strange stiffness that suddenly developed in her hips and joints puzzled this woman. She couldn't understand why, when she wanted to step on a chair, the second foot wouldn't follow the first. She didn't recognize it as rheumatism—but happily she used the right remedy. This is her own account of her experience—

"I began to wonder why I felt so stiff in my hips and joints. I wanted to get on a chair, I found it difficult to raise my second foot. But after taking one bottle of Kruschen Salts, I have derived great benefit. Going upstairs was difficult, but now I can walk up ordinarily and I feel I have got the Kruschen feeling. I had jaundice many years ago and occasionally looked rather yellow, but since taking Kruschen Salts my skin seems very clear. At the age of 62 I am working like a young one—even better than some at 20 years. I recently lost my husband, but I am earning my own living, thanks to Kruschen."—Mrs. M.C.

Do you realize what causes rheumatic pains and stiffness? Just what caused hers and everyone else's—nothing but sharp-edged crystals of uric acid which get between the joints. Kruschen Salts will swiftly dissolve these needle-pointed uric acid crystals which have settled in the joints. And because Kruschen is a combination of six salts, its work does not stop there. It will also flush out of the system every trace of these dissolved uric acid crystals. Further still, the regular daily use of Kruschen will prevent uric acid from ever forming again by keeping the inside regular and free from all poisonous waste matter. Kruschen Salts is obtainable at all Drug Stores at 45c. and 75c. per bottle.

GIRLS ROUT COMMUNISTS

When Communists tried to address factory girls at Homebush, Australia, they received an unexpected reception, and had to flee from the town. A group of Communists had visited Homebush the week before and had a hostile reception, but when two men and two women returned and started a meeting pandemonium broke loose. Five hundred girls joined them, and, pelting them with fruit and vegetables. One man fled to the railway station, but the other was held and beaten until eventually he was able to board a passing omnibus minus his hat and one shoe. One woman Communist fainted, but was revived and sent on her way.

When a young man tried to help the other woman he was attacked by the girls, who made her flee to the station.

A girl and an elderly woman were waiting for the other members of the party to arrive.

"Have a cigarette," asked the girl, offering her case.

The older woman looked at her in extreme annoyance.

"Smoke a cigarette!" she cried, indignantly. "Good gracious, I'd rather kiss the first man who came along."

INDIGESTION

Immediate relief!

Rich food... strong coffee... heavy smoking. Then the penalty for indulgence. Digestive distress!

People who are haunted by this form of suffering simply have not learned its one common cause.

Usually, it's the fault of too much acid.

Meats, fish, breads, pastry can easily cause overacidity, and this destroys the alkaline balance; foods won't digest. They can't. Nothing ever tastes good. One cigar—and you are lousy as if you had smoked ten. Things you eat sour in the stomach, causing pain, flatulence, your head aches, and you are constipated. These are danger signals!

Warnings that you are in immediate need of an antacid! Heed them, and meet that need at once with a little Phillips' Milk of Magnesia.

A creamy, pleasant-tasting spoonful will neutralize many times its volume in harmful acid. But take it for several days, till the whole digestive system is sweetened. Until the appetite returns, and that sourness is all dispelled, and every sign of overacidity has disappeared.

Doctors endorse Phillips' Milk of Magnesia. So be sure you get Phillips' and not a substitute. All drug stores in the Dominion have genuine Phillips' Milk of Magnesia. These are danger signals! (Made in Can.)

Gideons Installed 1,100,000 Bibles In World's Hotels

Approaching Dedication Service at Empress Hotel Calls Attention to Activities of Christian Commercial Travelers' Association—Like Rotary, Gideons Had Humble Beginning

WHO are the Gideons? Many a traveler in Canada and the United States must have asked this question, when he found on the top or in a drawer of the guest room dresser a copy of the Bible on which was inscribed: "Placed in this hotel by the Gideons," and in the centre of the legend a crest of a dove with a flame issuing from its mouth.

Were he a "globe trotter" his interest would be deepened, as he found in Tokyo and Peking and Singapore more Bibles with the same inscription, and still more as he journeyed homeward, to see the now familiar book awaiting him in Cairo and in practically every inn throughout the Bible land in Palestine.

The interest of any citizen of Victoria would not be lessened when he learned that in the hostels of this city, such as the Dominion, the Strathcona and the Empress, this same adjunct for the guest's convenience had been installed, and that on Sunday, November 29, there would be held at the Empress a service dedicatory of the Gideon Bibles in its guest rooms, in which representatives of the city churches would participate.

THREE CHARTER MEMBERS. The Gideons, like the Rotary organization, had a humble beginning. It was due to the sharing by two Christian traveling men of a hotel room in Bloomsbury, London, on October 23, 1899, a little more than thirty-two years ago. Fellowship that night in Bible reading and prayer was the starting point for the formation shortly after of a Christian commercial travelers' association with a charter membership of but three. This pioneer trio was led to take the name of Gideons, with reference to the darling band of three hundred whom Gideon led to his famous victory over the enemies of the Israelites on October 6, 1800. It was in the nineteenth century, together with some of its background. The sixteen-to-one ratio, he explained, arrived at because, for about 200 years prior to 1800 it was found that the average relative value of silver to gold had been about sixteen-to-one.

"That ratio had been maintained," said Mr. Bryan, "without any artificial regulation whatever. It was maintained throughout all the fluctuation in the production of the metals. In suggesting this conference, my thought is that the bi-metallic standard in some ratio is the only lasting solution of the present monetary problem for the world. It will be up to the experts to fix the ratio. Under present conditions foreign trade is vitally affected. It has ceased to be a business and has become a gamble."

He believes the time is now ripe to arouse discussion and thought on the question of the bi-metallic standard. It has moved from the realm of theory in 1896 to the field of the practical, with France and the United States holding a virtual monopoly on the world's gold, he holds. The man on the street, he believes has "had enough" experience to understand the subject as a live practical question.

Mr. Bryan issued his invitation to the governors of the Western States because they are silver producing States and their industries are directly affected. Also because the matter is being discussed in these States. He wants it understood that there is no political motive behind his move. He is not in politics, he said.

Development of British Columbia's poultry industry from a largely unorganized and sporadic effort before 1910 to a high ranking place on this continent, was sketched in an instructive address by J. B. Munro, Deputy Minister of Agriculture, before the South Saanich Farmers' Institute recently.

Mr. Munro paid a high tribute to pioneers in the industry, to the B.C. Poultry Association, and to the untiring services of J. R. Terry, B.C. poultry commissioner, who has devoted twenty-two years to an intensive study of means to improve production and returns to the industry. Under these auspices the first egg-laying test in Canada were officially conducted, and later became a continent-wide.

In normal times, Mr. Munro demonstrated, the industry has an output valued at $8,000,000 a year in this province. A car and an eighth of eggs are shipped out daily, production amounting to 21,000,000 dozens eggs a year. British Columbia has the highest record of production per bird, and the lowest cost production in Canada, the speaker stated. Quality was not the least valued attribute of the industry in this province, he said.

Mr. Munro spoke also on other matters of interest to the institute and was thanked for an able address.

B.C. Agent-General Fights Attitude of Hull City Council

British City Stipulated That Order for Paving Blocks Must Be Filled With Russian Timber —B.C. Could Have Provided the Material

THE manner in which Russian products were being given preference in some parts of Great Britain over those of British and Empire origin, justifying the imposition of the dumping duty, is evidenced in the manner in which the city of Hull stipulated that a large order for paving blocks be of Leningrad redwood. Strong opposition to this attitude has been voiced by F. P. Burden, British Columbia's Agent-General in England.

The situation is set out in a report in The London Daily Express of October 27: Hull has kept up its reputation for preferring foreign goods to British by accepting a tender within the last few days for half a million wooden blocks for the paving of its streets.

IDLE INDUSTRIES
The same city, which is full of seed-crushing mills rendered idle by the dumping of foreign cattle feed cake and has 18,000 unemployed signing the books at the labor exchange, has previously bought foreign tram rails in preference to British, and has consistently purchased foreign-made electric cables when British electrical firms have been pleading for orders.

At the last general election, Hull returned three Socialist members out of four, and the Socialists had a majority on the city council until the extension of the city boundaries last April resulted in the balance going in favor of the anti-Socialists.

SOCIALIST BODY
The Socialists still have thirty-five members on the city council, and there is a Socialist chairman of the works committee, which on October 13 advertised for tenders for 500,000 wooden paving sets, stipulating that they must be made of Leningrad redwood.

B.C. PROTEST
The Agent-General for British Columbia in London, on hearing of this, at once ascertained that his trade department was able to fulfill a contract for 500,000 wood sets at least equal quality to those from Russia.

He sent a telegram to the Lord Mayor of Hull pointing this out, and mentioned that Hull had now an excellent opportunity of trading with the Empire in preference to Russia, but it was too late.

The contract had already been given, and Hull streets will now be paved with Russian red wood instead of British Columbia Douglas fir blocks.

A member of the Hull City Council told him that Russian timber was stipulated in the advertisement on expert advice and not for political reasons.

TRIAL IN FUTURE
"We admit," he added, "that British Columbia sets might have been given a trial. They have been used in two or three of the London areas. We shall at once ascertain what the result has been. If they have been found satisfactory we shall no doubt give them a trial in future, but it is too late this time. We were guided chiefly by price. Russian paving blocks can be bought for considerably less money than similar blocks could be bought in any other part of the world."

MINING MEN PAY VISIT TO CITY

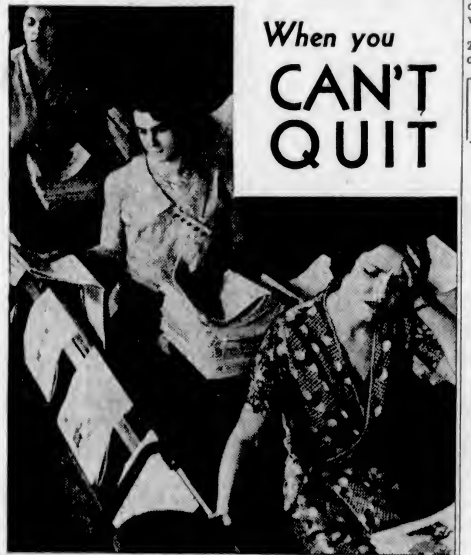

Operators From Sweden Are Touring Continent to Study Methods Employed Here

Visiting Canada and the United States for the purpose of investigating methods employed in the mining and smelting of ores, Oscar Falkman, of Stockholm, managing director of an operating company at Skelleftea, in Sweden, and his associates in the work, A. G. P. Falen, arrived in Victoria yesterday afternoon. The visit to this city is to be a short one, extending until today when they leave for the United States to continue their investigations there.

The visitors came from Trail, where they spent some time making an inspection of the works of the Consolidated Mining & Smelting Company. Speaking of the Trail works, Mr. Falkman, when seen at the Empress Hotel, had nothing but the highest praise for the work being carried out there. Everything was being operated, he said, in a most economical and efficient manner. He was deeply interested in the methods employed, and felt that the visit to these works was well spent, as it was of important educational value to them.

The mining operations carried on at Skelleftea represents about half a million tons of ore a year. The chief values from this are in the gold content. Copper of a much lower value is also taken from the ore, but it is for the gold that the mines are operated.

It was her first visit to a night club; she was seated beside an artistic-looking young man. "Tell me," he ventured, "do you care for mezzotints?" "Well, no," she stammered. "At least, not before supper."

Navy	2	0	28	10
5th Brigade	1	1	5	11
J.B.A.A.	1	2	10	16
Wanderers	0	3	3	21

Playing one of the finest three-quarter games seen on a local field for a long time, Navy eluded into a tie with the Canadian Scottish, last year's champions, in the race for the first-half championship in the Senior Rugby League yesterday afternoon at the Canteen Grounds before a good turnout of fans, 17-3. Getting the "breaks," the 5th Brigade broke into the win column by defeating the J.B.A.A. fifteen at the Oak Bay Park by a 5-0 score.

Serving notice that will be a hard squad to beat in the latter race, the sailors were far too strong for the Wanderers. The Navy's three-quarter line worked like a well-oiled machine throughout and tore their opponents' back division to shreds throughout both halves. The tars used their decided weight to great advantage during their line plunges.

The gunners were lucky in blanking the oarsmen. The play during the first half was pretty well even, but the second session was the Navy's by a considerable margin. Less than a minute from time the gunners plunged over for the lone try, which was converted. Tragedy crept into the game at Oak Bay Park, when Art Egel, three-quarter for the oarsmen, sustained a broken leg late in the first half when he was hit hard during one of the strong onslaughts of the gunners. He was rushed to the Jubilee Hospital, where an X-ray was taken. Weaver, of the 5th, was injured in the second half and was forced from play.

The 5th kicked off, but Kennedy returned the play to midfield with a fine kick. Following a scrum, the oarsmen forced the gunners well back into their own area and failed to get over. Returning the play on a fine punt by Roddy McInnes, the gunners' forward line held the Navy in their own twenty-five for several minutes. Buller, Le Marquand and Dowell engineered a hard attack but the latter lost the ball on the pass. Play went back to the gunners' territory on a free kick. The Navy forwards carried the ball at their feet to the gunners' five-yard line where a scrum resulted. McInnes took the ball and kicked to midfield to relieve the tension. For the remainder of the half play was well distributed with both teams trying long kicks to gain yards.

BAYS PRESS HARD
Starting on the offensive from the kick-off, the oarsmen pounded away at the 5th's line nearly the entire second half, but try as they did they failed to find the opening for a score. The 5th's back division stood up exceptionally well under the heavy barrage of attacks. McMillen, Godwin, Kinsman, Cockin and Latta all tried to plunge through for tries but were brought to earth on near the line. Latta nearly got one after taking the ball from McMillen, but the referee blew for a five-yard scrum. The Navy kept up the pressure with Cockin, diminutive scrum half, playing one of the finest games of his career. He figured in nearly all the Navy's charges and made openings for several others, all of which were blocked before any damage was done.

BELLIS SCORES
Alan Le Marquand broke away on a beautiful long run from midfield for a try, but he was whisked when the linesman waved for a line-out. It was a tough break, for the fast wing

Bobby Will Build Perfect Golf Course

BOBBY JONES

CONSTRUCTION is under way at Augusta, Ga., on a golf course which Bobby Jones hopes to make the most perfect in the world. It will be his ideal course—realization of the ambition of a golfing lifetime. The course, fostered by the Augusta National Golf Club, is not a commercial project, and the retired champion will direct its destiny as president.

In describing plans for the course Jones pointed out that it would not be a "back-breaker," but would be a course which would require a maximum of mental effort and golfing skill—but no acrobatics. It will be the course of which Jones has always dreamed, where he may play his brand of golf.

Three-quarter made a great run. Five minutes before the final whistle, the Navy were awarded a free kick on the 5th's five-yard line, but the gunners recovered and started an offensive which resulted in the lone score, forty seconds from time. Jack "Rabbit" Bellis, the lad who skipped the local Canadian Rugby squad, was the cause of the score.

Edna refereed and teams follow: 5th Brigade—H. Engelson, Bellis, Weaver, Le Marquand, Skillings, Cox, B. Engelson, Walton, Robinson, McInnes, Buller, Dowell and Warnock.

J.B.A.A.—Kennedy, Egel, Dunn, Johnson, Latta, Kinsman, Godwin, Cockin, McMillen, Pettigrew, Springling, Lemm, Smith, Moses and Peard.

Crashing their way through a weakened Wanderers' team, the Navy administered a sound thrashing to the Oak Bay fifteen, 17-3. The game was feared by high tackling, and accidents were more plentiful than touchdowns.

Starting off at a terrific pace, the Navy carried the ball well into the Wanderers' territory, where, after a series of scrums, the Navy three gained possession of the ball and executed a beautiful run, terminating with Hibbert diving over the line for the opening score. Barker failed with the kick.

It was not very long before the Wanderers found themselves another three points behind, due to another breaking three. Putman, scooped up the ball and dashed over the line with half the Oak Bay team at his heels. Barker again took the kick and failed to convert.

From this point on, the Wanderers began to fight and for a time had the Navy hemmed in their own twenty-five, but eventually the heavier weight of the Navy's scrum took effect and they drove their lighter opponents back down the field.

It was at this time that injuries began to take a toll in the losers' line-up. Harold Parfitt, plucky little half of the Oak Bay team, suffered a severe injury to his side, which necessitated medical attention and kept him out of the play for several minutes, while Hood, one of the Wanderers' forwards, cracked his ribs and was forced to retire from the field for the rest of the game. While their opponents were thus handicapped, Barker, of the Navy, scored the third try of the day and then converted the kick for extra points. Shortly after this, with Parfitt back in the play, the Wanderers were awarded a free kick, which Douglas converted. From here until half time play zigzagged back and forth with no additional score.

The second period was practically a repetition of the first, with the Wanderers still game and fighting hard, but lacking that finish and technique which makes championship winners. Time and time again hard driving forward rushes by the losers drew the applause of the spectators, but it was all to no avail, for within a very few minutes of the beginning of the half Hall plunged across the line for the first score of the stanza, to be followed a few minutes later by the powerful Sweetman. Barker took both kicks and once more failed to convert. With dogged determination, the Wanderers fought back, but the Navy line remained intact and the score unaltered.

Grant refereed, and the teams were as follows: Wanderers—Symons, Usher, Haines, Golly, Meade-Robins, Andrews, H. Parfitt, Penning, Douglas, D. Parfitt, Hood, Scott, Dunsmuir, Field and De Blaquiere. Navy—Robinson, Hibbert, Banfield, Hudson, Archer, Perreux, Barker, Adams, Sweetman, McDonald, Putman, Sharp, Donald and Hall.

Ontario and Quebec Sending Three More to Vancouver for Tour of Japan

TWO OTHER PLAYERS MAY JOURNEY WEST

TORONTO, Nov. 21 (CP).—Officials of the British Rugby Football Unions of Ontario and Quebec announced today that three players had been selected to represent Eastern Canada on the all-Canada rugby team to tour Japan early in the new year. If arrangements mature, two other players may also join the team.

The Ontario Union will be represented on the touring side by Jerry Boone and J. Selkirk, of the Toronto Scottish Club, while W. Suter, of the Westward Club, Montreal, will go from Quebec. Efforts are also being made to allow Bob Batty, sterling three-quarter of the Wanderers Club, of Toronto, and A. Cox, of Bank of Montreal, to join the tourists. Boone, Selkirk and Suter will leave for Vancouver on December 26 and the all-Canada team will sail from Vancouver on January 2.

In addition to the Eastern Canada players, it is expected the touring side will be composed of fourteen players from British Columbia, and two each from Manitoba and Saskatchewan.

Up-Islanders Shut Out St. Saviour's in Coast League Soccer by 3-0 Score

COAL CITY SQUAD DISPLAY FINE FORM

VANCOUVER, Nov. 21.—Nanaimo City secured revenge for their defeat by St. Saviour's in the coal city three weeks ago by trimming the churchmen 3-0 in a Pacific Coast League game at Con Jones Park this afternoon. The ground was treacherous owing to frost, and the visitors adapted themselves far better to the conditions than the home eleven.

Bob Gray scored the only goal of the first half with a wonderful cross shot after twenty minutes' play. Strang, who substituted for Fowler in the second half, headed the second seventeen minutes after resuming, when Hayreaves misjudged a high centre from Waugh and Alsbury dashed out too late.

St. Saviour's were awarded a penalty for hands against English, but Blewitt saved Hall's shot finely and made two thrilling saves from corners which resulted. A minute from time Alsbury stepped in and instead of running out to meet R. Grey, and Strang dashed up to easily head another corner.

Fate Deals Hard Blow To Victoria Ruggers

Art Egel and Bobby Wilson Receive Broken Legs in League Fixtures—Vaucher Breaks Collar Bone—Weaver Badly Injured

Fate played havoc with local Rugby players yesterday afternoon in both the senior and intermediate fixtures. Two players sustained broken legs, one a broken collar-bone, and another a few broken ribs. Several other minor injuries were reported. Most of them were caused by the hard condition of the grounds, due to the frost over Friday night.

Playing in the J.B.A.A.-5th Brigade fixture at the Oak Bay Park, Art Egel, stellar fullback and three-quarter for the oarsmen, received a broken leg late in the first half and was rushed from the field to the grounds, where he was taken to the hospital. The quartette of unfortunate ruggers were doing as well as could be expected last night.

THE winner of the 100-metre run in the tenth Olympic Games, to be held in Los Angeles, will carry the colors of the United States, Germany, South Africa, or Japan. The nations are favored in the order named.

Rayment to Battle Drennan Hincks for Men's Open Laurels

One-Armed Star Reaches Last Bracket in Titular Meet Against City Champ—Miss Miller and Miss F. Oates in Women's Final

Finalists were named in the annual Garrison Badminton Club championships yesterday evening at the Armories. Hugo Rayment, one-armed star of the courts, will face Drennan Hincks, city titleholder, for the men's singles crown, while history repeated itself in the women's division, Miss Mona Miller and Miss Florence Oates, last year's finalists, again fighting their way to the last bracket. Play continued in the various other events and keen competition held sway during the day.

Tomorrow afternoon and evening, the semi-finals of practically all events will take place, while on Wednesday the champions for the 1931-1932 season will be named. Following the finals, the trophies will be presented, and another great tournament will be written into the history books.

Yesterday afternoon Bud Hocking worked his way to the semi-finals in the men's singles by defeating Don Campbell, 8-15, 15-8, 15-8, only to succumb to the brilliant play of Drennan Hincks in the evening in straight sets, 15-8, 15-11, 15-11. Hincks was in rare form and never gave his opponent an opportunity to get the upper hand. Rayment wielded his racket with deadly results against Woods in the other semi-final and walked off the courts the winner, after an extra set. Rayment won the first set, 17-15, dropped the second at 9-15, but came back strong in the third to win, 15-9.

Flashing the same brand of badminton which carried her to the honors last season in the club meet and city championship, Miss Mona Miller disposed of Miss Doreen Swaine in straight sets, 11-2, 11-4, while Miss Florence Oates eliminated Mrs. Quinlan, 11-1, 11-4. With both players at their best, the final for the women's crown is expected to be a great tussle.

Philco Radio Wins World Approval

Philco Arranges Largest National Radio Broadcast

Famous Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra Under Direction of Leopold Stokowski Will Be Heard Over Continent Saturday Nights—Is Epoch in Musical History

WHEN Leopold Stokowski raises his baton in Philadelphia's great auditorium on the occasion of each broadcast of the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra concert, the largest audience that ever listened to a musical programme tunes in. The entire programme is broadcast to every corner of the United States and Canada. This is Philco's contribution to radio. The largest commercial hook-up ever attempted broadcasts what is one of the finest symphony orchestras in the world under the leadership of one of the world's greatest and most spectacular conductors.

Never before has such a musical programme been given in its entirety, and never to such an enormous audience.

FIVE MORE CONCERTS
Five more Saturday night concerts will be broadcast during the season. The music that was confined to the limited thousands of music lovers in Philadelphia is this season being given to millions of radio fans all over the continent. Only one hook-up of equal importance has ever been attempted, that which broadcast the famous address of Pope Pius XI. And that was for only a few minutes, while the Philco broadcasting of the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra occupies a whole evening, as long as the concert lasts.

SHRINE OF MUSIC
When Conductor Stokowski raises his ivory and ebony baton on his score rack to call the orchestra to attention you hear it. And as this mighty aggregation of master musicians sweeps into the chords of the opening number, every string, woodwind and brass instrument carries its blended harmony to you no matter where you live. You are present at this music feast, just as if you sat in the deep upholstered seats of Philadelphia's leading shrine of music.

Do you realize what an achievement this broadcasting of an entire orchestral concert means? It means first of all that other national advertisers, realizing the magnitude and importance of this broadcasting feat, have given up their time to Philco for the occasion. It means that the great music of all times

Unusual Plot Features New Richard Dix Story

Endeavor for New Material for Screen Results in Production of "The Public Defender"—
Now Showing at Dominion Theatre

The race for new story material and novel situations instituted by the producers of motion pictures has resulted in many unusual plot twists and angles.

Radio Pictures, among the most active in the general plan to create something new, has been singularly fortunate in developing a startling new dramatic theme in Richard Dix's "The Public Defender," which is now showing at the Dominion Theatre.

The picture presents Dix in another remarkable characterization—that of a returned war hero who has been so keyed up by the fierceness and excitement of his battle experiences that civil life is impossible for him.

There are no more wars, and he cannot fight legitimately, so he organizes a unitive campaign of his own against the business rascals and society swindlers who wreck banks, prey on the gullible and steal millions seemingly under the protection of the law.

To do this he leads a double life; he makes the rounds of his exclusive clubs in his natural self, a rich, idle young man, searching information. At night he becomes a sinister avenger, descending on his victims and leaving a card reading: "Public Defender" to remind them of their ultimate fate.

MARX BROTHERS PROVIDE HUMOR

Quartette of Comedians in "Monkey Business," Showing at Columbia Theatre

Yes, the Marx Brothers have names which sound like those of other folks, but even their best friends won't call them by those names. And to each other they are known even in the cloistered quiet of Marx family life, as Harpo, Groucho, Chico and Zeppo.

Although they speak to each other in private life as Harpo, Groucho, Chico and Zeppo, the mad maniacs of filmdom are never heard to utter these names in the screamingly funny movies they make. This was held true in "Cocoanuts," "Animal Crackers," and now in their latest humor, "Monkey Business," at the Columbia Theatre.

"Monkey Business" presents the brothers in a story that has to do with stowaways and thugs aboard an ocean liner. The four brothers are the stowaways and practically anybody is a thug. It all winds up when they come ashore and rescue Zeppo's girl friend from the clutches of bootleggers in an old barn.

"Steal the picture. What if they vividly; each is of almost equal importance to the story; Cary Lock-

PLAYHOUSE BOOKS COMEDY-ROMANCE

"Too Young to Marry," Is Title of Adventure-Love Story
Opening Tomorrow

"Too Young to Marry," the comedy-romance which opens tomorrow at the Playhouse Theatre, is without doubt one of the most heart-warming, uproariously tender pictures of this or any other season. It is a brilliant version of the Martin Playhouse which has captivated Broadway several seasons ago.

"Too Young to Marry" is the story of the ways and means adopted by the daughter of a acid and henpeck, to win a grocer boy of her heart. The adventurous boy and girl are played by Loretta Young and Grant Withers. Incidentally, "Too Young to Marry" is said to be the first picture these two young people made after their elopement by airplane from Hollywood to Yuma, Arizona, where they were married, when Loretta was but seventeen.

TO PRESENT COMEDY AT CRYSTAL GARDEN

Packed with laughs from curtain to curtain, brim full of the scintillating wit which placed him in the foremost rank of English playwrights, and packed with laughs and chuckles as are few of these most outstanding comedies of the century, Oscar Wilde's hilarious farce, "The Importance of Being Earnest," promises to draw record audiences to the Crystal Garden on Wednesday and Thursday nights.
The play, which will start punctually at 8 o'clock, is being presented in aid of the Women's Workroom for the relief of families of the unemployed by the St.
Paul's Players.

The cast is exceptionally strong.
Miss Vera Sharland and Miss Eileen Wilson play the juvenile roles opposite Richard Blomfield and Stephen B. Lloyd. Miss Muriel
C. Thompson, Mrs. M. C. Ridley and Herbert E. Pott each give an outstanding performance. The study, and the exceptionally competent cast is completed by H. W.
N. Moorhouse and Allan King.

FINE MUSIC CHOSEN FOR CHORAL CONCERT

A delightful programme of choral and solo selections has been arranged for the concert to be given by the Victoria Male Choir, assisted by Miss Olive V. Kurth, in the new City Temple auditorium, on Wednesday night, November 26, at 8:30 o'clock.

Frank L. Tupman will conduct the choir, which, under his capable leadership, has achieved an enviable reputation in Victoria. Following is a list of the selections to be rendered by the choir:

"Laudamus," "Hymn Before Action," "Sleeping," "Galloping Deer," "There Rolls the Deep," "Phantom
Host," "Rise, Sleep No More," "Poor Old Joe," "I'm a Alongin' For You," "Mellow Time," "Beleaguered," and the "Song of the Vikings." These selections will be given in four groups.

Miss Kurth will be heard in three groups, including classical numbers, as "Down in the Valley," "Never Weather Beaten Sail," "Fine Knacks for Ladies," "Chi Vuoi la Zingarella,"

English actor, will appear at the City Temple auditorium in a costumed recital, "Dramatic Inter-literature. In it the story of the drama is presented in a chronologicharacters, each perfect in make-up, costume and interpretation.

The selections commence with the portrayal of the Prophet Job, and thence progress through the great roles of classical and modern drama.
Each scene presented forms a complete picture, and is prefaced by a brief description of the play, during which the requisite make-up is assumed in the presence of the audience.

V. L. Granville is an actor of international repute and has given his dramatic "Interludes" in all parts of the world. His career on the dra-

Forbes-Robertson, Sir Charles Wyndham, Sir Lewis Waller, etc. His appearance in Victoria is sponsored by the Temple Brotherhood.

MAYPOLE DANCE TO BE OPERA FEATURE

Mrs. Dorothy Wilson, in charge of the ballet, is working very hard and has succeeded in making the Maypole dance a most outstanding attraction in the opening of the first act of "Robin Hood," showing at the Royal Theatre November 27 and 28. Pretty girls in charming costumes will bring lovely rhythm and color to entrance the eyes and ears of a privileged public.

Little imagination is needed to transport one to the Sherwood Forest, where the audience will feel they are part of the game of skillful which will Scarlet and Friar Tuck play, and help with the merry gisting of the outlaws and tinkers.

Export Shipments of Canadian Wheat Continue at Improved Rate

By CHARLES LYNCH
(Copyright, 1931, by The Chicago Daily News Foreign Service)

OTTAWA, Nov. 21.—Export shipments of Canadian wheat overseas continue heavy, shipments for the two weeks ended November 13, according to the Federal Bureau of Statistics, totalling 10,008,700 bushels, of which 1,221,000 bushels went out from United States Atlantic ports. Although the export movement for the week ended November 13 was reduced to a little over half the previous week's shipments, still it is the second largest during the season and compares favorably with the same week last year. The water shipments for the first two weeks of November were nearly of the same volume as that of the corresponding two weeks in 1930, states the Bureau of Statistics in its report.

STOCKS ARE INCREASING
"Stocks of wheat in the elevators throughout Canada continue to increase. The amount in store November 13 was 174,140,217 bushels, as compared with 171,695,120 bushels a week ago, and with 198,083,932 bushels for the same week in 1930.

"Canadian wheat stocks at the United States lake and Atlantic ports amounted to 11,002,119 bushels, a slight decrease from the previous week with 11,329,470 bushels. Of the former amount 9,862,152 bushels were in the elevators and afloat at Buffalo, while the balance, 1,119,967 bushels, was stored in New York.

DELIVERIES DECLINE
"Another decrease is shown in the deliveries at the Western country elevators for the week ended November 6, 1931, when 13,418,588 bushels were reported shipped from the farms. This movement for the previous week amounted to 16,003,775 bushels, and for the corresponding week in 1930, 13,625,180 bushels.

REX BEACH STORY STARS JACK HOLT

"White Shoulders" at Coliseum, Tells of Chorus Girl Who Preferred Love to Luxuries

Mary Astor, Jack Holt and Ricardo Cortez are now showing at the Coliseum Theatre in a talkie dramatization of Rex Beach's story of marital maladjustments, "White Shoulders."

This Radio picture, directed by Mel Brown, who also directed "Andy in His First Talking Picture," moves through the glamorous settings of New York's upper crust to the Riviera and other fashionable Continental resorts, and to South America in a procession of dramatic episodes. Throughout runs the Rex Beach type of romance—hard-hitting and flavored with action every step of the way.

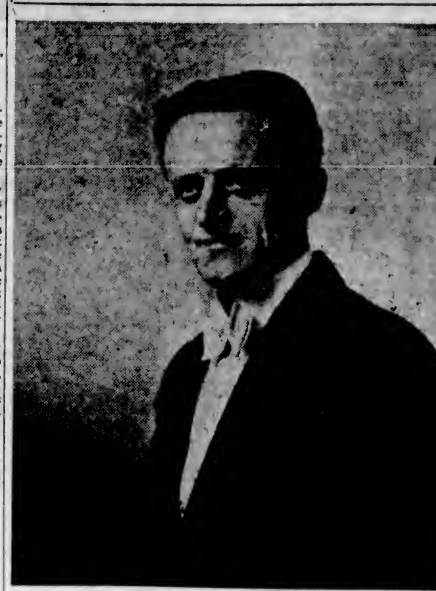

"White Shoulders" tells the story of a beautiful chorus girl who searches for love rather than luxury, and believes she finds it in Gordon Kent, a multi-millionaire who thinks he can give her both. Kent's idea of love are primitive and adorned with diamonds. The girl rapidly finds disillusion and tries to escape through the love of a poor artist, Kent. The subsequent drama, it is said, twists the tail of standard film plots to give a new punch to the situation which makes it highly realistic.

ARION CLUB WILL OPEN CONCERT SEASON SOON

On Thursday, December 3, Victoria's old-established male voice choir, the Arion Club, will give its first concert of the season in the Royal Victoria Theatre. This club is now in its fortieth season, and the forthcoming event is its one hundred and second public concert.

The programme has been selected to give the widest range of musical expression. Love and war, daring deeds, bittheous Spring and autumn night, all are portrayed with music's charm. The clash of cavalry is heard in Werrenath's robust "Cavalier's Song," succeeded by the delicate melody of Wilson Smith's "If I But Knew." A more ambitious number is Hammond's dramatic setting of "Lechivar." The matching of music and theme in this ballad is delightful. One sees "the poor craven bridegroom," the stately dance, the whispering bridesmaids, the wild leap to the saddle. The lusty shout, "She Is Won," sung by full fifty voices, and the wild chase "O'er Cannable Lea" set the pulses tingling.

The principal number will be Hermann Mohr's cantata, "To the Genius of Music." The soprano solo on this cantata will be sung by Miss Avis R. Phillips, of Vancouver, who will also sing two groups of songs.

Mother! The tight coughs of children can usually be relieved by one application of Vicks. Just rub on freely and cover with warm flannel.

Millions more each year find there is nothing to equal the double attack of Vicks VapoRub in checking colds.

Rubbed on throat and chest, Vicks acts through the skin like a poultice or plaster, "drawing out" tightness and soreness. At the same time, its medicated vapors, released by the body heat, are breathed in direct to the air-passages.

Mothers especially appreciate Vicks because it avoids "dosing," which so often upsets children's delicate stomachs.

Adults, too, now prefer this modern method of checking colds. In fact, the whole trend of medical practice is away from needless "dosing."

The Week in the Air
By CAPT. IRA C. EAKER
Copyright, 1931, by North American Newspaper Alliance, Inc.

While I was flying across the continent recently, stopping at intermediate landing fields, airport attaches noted that I piloted a low wing retractable gear plane, and asked about the gear.

These men had heard reports and rumors of failures. They were curious to know about General Foch's landing in Mexico with wheels up, the experience of U.S. Assistant-Secretary of War Davidson and Lieut. Quesada in landing at Michel Field recently with the wheels half up and half down, and my landing at the National Air Races with wheels up due to malfunctioning of the gear which prevented getting them into landing position.

There is so much interest in this latest and most revolutionary type of plane necessary that a word about it seems in order.

The normal landing gear of a plane, with wheels, axles and struts suspended below the wings, offering resistance to the air, has been a constant annoyance to manufacturers in their effort to get every possible mile of speed.

EFFECT ON POWER
A recent experiment demonstrated the necessity for retractable landing gears. In a wind tunnel test it was found that it takes thirty-four horsepower to pull the two tires alone through the air at 200 miles an hour. Some idea may be gathered from this of the power wasted in pulling the whole landing gear. For many years attempts have been made to retract this into the wings after take-off.

As early as 1917 there was one notable effort in this regard, and in 1927 two planes in the Pulitzer race had disappearing landing gear. It remained, however, for the Lockheed Company to work out the first device for general use in commercial planes. The first effort, as is always the case in highly experimental mechanisms, was quite complicated.

The U.S. Army Air Corps, always vitally interested in devices which increase speed, took over that first experimental plane for testing. The record reads something like this: Pilots landed the plane three times with wheels up, twice with one wheel up and the other down, and twice with the wheels half up and half down. The plane was then flown with the wheels up and down, and twice with the wheels half up and half down. The plane was then flown with the wheels up and down, and twice with the wheels half up and half down.

But here is the remarkable thing: That plane which went through these weird landing experiences is still flying.

PRIZES DEVICE
After landing the plane with wheels up, General Foch said: "It was a very reassuring experience. That faculty which makes it possible to alight with its landing gear folded neatly into the wings immeasurably increases the safety of the ship. Hereafter, when I am forced to land in poor terrain, I shall always land with wheels up. There is no shock—it does no damage save bending the propeller, and the plane comes to rest gently in about eighty feet. The experience for the pilot is very similar to landing on the deck of an airplane carrier."

There have been different reasons for gear failures. Pulleys have failed. Cables have slipped out of pulleys, handles on the oil pump have broken, pilots have forgotten to lower the wheels. But from each failure has come improvement, until at present the gear is almost foolproof. It has a device which rings a buzzer as the wheels are retarded for landing. This warns the pilot to lower his gear. It flashes a green light in the cockpit when the wheels are fully down.

GEAR INCREASES SPEED
The best part, however, is the fact that the gear does increase speed materially. The tested difference between a plane's velocity with wheels up and down is thirty-three miles an hour. This has made it possible to construct a transport, carrying six passengers and a pilot, capable of cruising 180 miles an hour. The retractable landing gear is also a feature of the U.S. Army's newest fighters.

The latest bomber folds its landing gear into the wing while in flight. This retractable mechanism has been through its early experimental stages, it has passed its period of trial and error, and has come to stay. Any device which adds thirty miles or more to the speed of aircraft is a permanent feature, you may rest assured. The engineers who developed and improved it are to be congratulated on the finished product.

PLANES IN MINIATURE
A few days ago at United Airports in Los Angeles, I saw a remarkable assembly of aircraft. There were Colonel Lindbergh's planes, Commander Byrd's North and South Pole ships, Jimmy Doolittle's plane, Captain Hawk's mystery "13," Kingsford-Smith's round-trip plane, the American and French Question Marks and Post and Gatty's famous Winnie Mae. There were planes of every type—bomber, navy amphibian, German Gothas, British SE-5's, with scarcely a well known war or post-war type missing.

These planes filled a large room—they were all on tables. They were models which youngsters in the vicinity of Los Angeles had built and submitted in competition for prizes. Many of the models were scale facsimiles, exact in every detail.

The boys who built them will be right in the middle of the aeronautics industry in a few years. From them will come skilled workers, engineers, mechanics, pilots and manufacturers.

BOYS' MODEL CLUBS
The boys' glider and airplane model clubs are distinctly worth while. Lads who have built airplane models and youngsters who launch gliders become more intimate with the theory and practice of flight than many men who are now figures in aeronautics.

Two or three years ago a citizen of Tucson, Ariz., went to see Assistant-Secretary Davidson on some matter pertaining to Tucson airport. With him was his young son, who attracted Mr. Davidson's attention by his scrutiny of a table filled with models of army planes.

Mr. Davidson pointed out a particular scale model and asked the lad if he knew it. He said: "Yes, sir. That's an army fighter called A-6-1."

That quick and true reply caught my fancy. I asked the boy and found there was not an army plane model—bomber, fighter or transport—which this lad of ten could not design, fill with technical letter and number army symbols. For some time I have noted that the average boy in grammar and high school is keenly interested in flying—not a passing interest such as his seniors display, but a practical, consuming enthusiasm.

Short Covering Checks Decline At Wall Street

WHEAT PRICES MOVE UPWARD

Trend Is Downward With Trading Light At Eastern Markets

NEW YORK, Nov. 21 (AP).—Short covering softened the fall of the stock market today, but the cushion of buying orders was poorly padded, and closing prices averaged lower notwithstanding a small rise in the rails.

An early advance in wheat stimulated repurchases for the short account and gains of about 1 to 3 points were numerous by the end of the first hour. When wheat broke sharply from the highs, however, shares dropped also, although there was a late recovery by both markets. Transactions in stocks totaled 87,718 shares.

United States Steel was again actively offered and made a new low at 60, after selling at 63 1/8, or 2 points higher. Supported at the bottom, the industrial leader squeezed back to 63 3/4, making the net loss 1-4. American Telephone and General Electric pushed down, together with Western Union, National Biscuit, Woolworth and Procter & Gamble.

Auburn Auto, International Nickel, General Motors, Sears-Roebuck, Kennecott, Standard Oil of New Jersey and Bethlehem closed steady to firm. New York Central, Atchafalpa, Baltimore and Ohio and Norfolk & Western were up a point or more. Union Pacific lost all but a fraction of a 2-3-4 point advance.

Foreign exchanges were heavy, reaching the week's lowest quotations in many instances. The French franc steadied a little, but sterling cables lost a cent and a half and Scandinavian rates again declined. The Japanese yen firmed when it appeared that, despite yesterday's mix-up over the Manchurian trade, there still was a possibility of an armistice.

Cotton, influenced by a larger grinning output than had been looked for, was off 30 to 40 cents a bale.

The bond market declined today, but a certain amount of resistance to the decline developed in the late trading and closing levels represented.

WHEAT PRICES MOVE UPWARD

Steadier Cables and Fair Export Trade Are Main Factors in Advance

WINNIPEG, Nov. 21 (CP).—Snapping out of a two-day slump all wheat futures advanced on the grain exchange here today. Closing prices recorded gains of 1 to 1 1/2 cents above yesterday's close.

November closed at 63-8, up 1 cent. December gained 1-1/2 at 63-3-4 to 63-7-8. May gained 1-1/4 at 68-1-8 to 68-1-4, while July moved up an even cent to 69.

Steadier cables and a fair export trade were the main factors in the advance today. It was largely a professional market.

Sale of 500,000 bushels of Canadian wheat overnight and a steady cable from Liverpool gave the market strong tone at the start, but steady cables and a fair export trade were the main factors in the advance today.

Good demand for various grades of cash wheat was in evidence at spreads unchanged from the previous morning, but offerings were light and volume of trade was not extensive.

That Body of Yours

By James W. Barton, M.D.

PHYSICIANS AND DENTISTS

One of the hopeful signs of the times is to see that our up-to-date hospitals now have one or more dentists on the staff. The dentist has the same standing as other members, attends and takes part in all staff meetings to the advantage of the hospital, the patient, and the staff itself.

Now, while this is a step in the right direction, it really is only a step, as the real getting together should begin in the high school or university before medical or dental college is reached.

The dentist is treating the human body in such an important and serious way that his qualifications previous to entering the dental college should be equal to that of a medical student. During his studies at the dental college he should inform himself of the entire workings of the body—heart, lungs, stomach, intestine, nose, throat, eye and so forth—in sickness and health, so that he may be on an equal footing with the physician when the ailment of a patient is under discussion.

Dr. J. H. Klock, Orlando, Fla., suggests that there should be an exchange of professors and teachers between the dental and the medical school. In this way various opinions could be expressed and the students would thus learn to respect these opinions coming

HAMBONE'S MEDITATIONS

By J. P. Alley

DAT GENTMAN GITTING DE BIG HAID OVER HE JOB; LAW ME! —DEYS PLINTY O' FOLKS DONE CLOMB OVER BETTUH JOBS DAN DE ONE HE GOT!

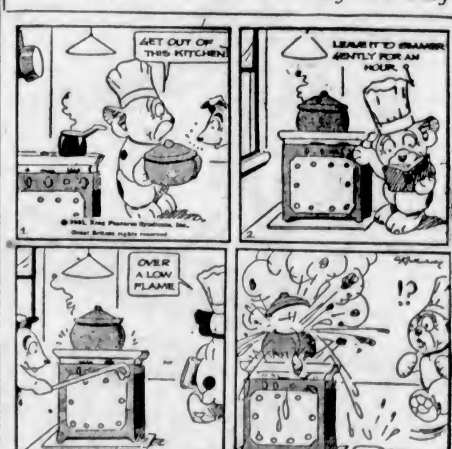

As it is at present, the dentist naturally thinks he knows more about the teeth and their care, and about whether they should or should not be removed.

The physician, on the other hand, knows more about the patient himself; knows his entire body; has discovered that some infection is in his blood and that after going over his entire body he can find no other source of infection except the teeth, as shown by the X-ray picture. He naturally wants the teeth removed at once.

You can readily see that if the physicians and dentists were thrown more together before they graduated there would not be so many differences of opinion as to what should be done about suspicious teeth.

However, the fact that dentists are now on the staff is worth much to hospital patients.

Mr. and Mrs. Younghusband were waiting for the bus to take them home after a visit to the theatre. "Before we were married," she said, "you always took me about in a taxi. Now, after we've been married six months you seem to think a bus is good enough."

Mr. Younghusband frowned, and seemed unable to find an answer. Presently he said: "Don't begin to think that, dear. The reason why we go by bus is because I'm so proud of you. If I always took you in a taxi, nobody would see you, whereas in a bus I can show you off to dozens of people."

Victoria's List of Industrial Firms Growing Steadily

City Residents Unaware of Important Part Played by Local Manufacturers—Large Payroll Contributed by Great Variety of Industries

VICTORIA is known to the world as one of the most ideal residential centres in the world. The beauties and vacation attractions are vaunted throughout the continent in order to attract the growing tourist trade, which forms a very large factor in the wealth of the city. The possibilities of Victoria as an industrial centre and the tremendous part played by our manufacturing establishments in our annual payroll is a fact that is too often overlooked.

Geographically Victoria enjoys every advantage. With three excellent harbors the city is the first and last port of call for all shipping entering and leaving the Pacific Northwest. Water and power are available in quantities far surpassing the present consumption, and there is little or no hindrance to the ultimate development in this direction.

RESIDENTS IGNORANT

Many Victoria residents are in complete ignorance of the very considerable amount of industry and manufacture which is carried on in Victoria at the present time. An approximate estimate of the value of the products manufactured here for three months totals $10,498,000. This employs nearly 3,000 workers, with an annual payroll of practically three and a half million dollars.

Fish packing and canning takes a large part in this total, being reckoned as one of the major industries. Salmon, herring, pilchards and cod are put up in all forms. Ship and boat building and repair, bulk large, the sheltered harbors and ease of access being especially favorable. Lumber mills, manufacturing all kinds of building material, dressed lumber, doors, sashes, frames, rough dimension timbers and "squares," ship their products to all parts of the world. Cement making has won Victoria considerable fame. Roofing materials are also manufactured in large quantities, not only in the city but in the surrounding areas. The list of industries which are most striking, excluding many which play an important part in Victoria's growth, each of these has shown consistent development with the growth of the city, many have ceased to rely upon the local market and have encroached upon the territory of other cities, competing successfully with bigger and more powerful firms. The basic reason of their growth has lain in the support by Victoria citizens and merchants, clear sighted enough to realize that a dollar spent at home is one that must inevitably return with interest.

Victoria Toy Factory Is Entering Eastern Market

Hiker Manufacturing Company Receives Large Orders as Result of Yo-Yo Craze Introduced in East—Plant Has Rapid Growth

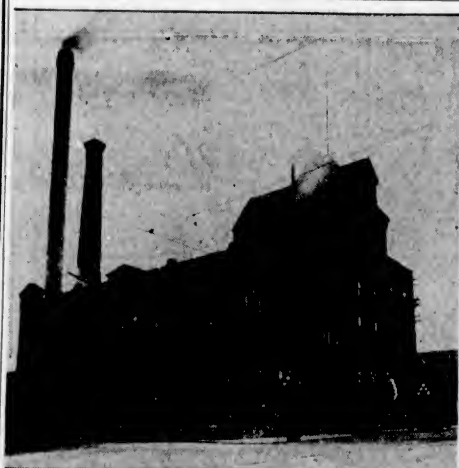

The Yo-Yo craze has swept the Eastern Provinces due to an intensive campaign conducted by the Hiker Manufacturing Company, Ltd., with the result that locally manufactured toys of every variety are being shipped East for the Christmas trade. It was announced yesterday by Eric E. McCallum, managing director of the firm, who has just returned from the East.

Shifts are working overtime, and extra men have been taken on to meet the Christmas demand. Never before, Mr. McCallum declared, have the Eastern points, and Montreal particularly, shown such great preference for Canadian-made products.

"Our campaign was conducted in the face of intense competition from the United States, but with the aid of Montreal newspapers we were able to sell more than half a million Yo-Yos in the East."

Easton's Caddy's and other department stores have taken orders for toys, and we have shipped also.

BREWERY IS BIG CONCERN

Victoria - Phoenix Brewery Started in Small Way Many Years Ago

The brewing industry in Victoria is one of the oldest enterprises in British Columbia which, after more than seventy years, is still operated today. In 1856, the year in which a newspaper was established in Victoria and which later became The Victoria Daily Colonist, William Steinberger commenced the operation of a brewery in this city. This was the origin of the Victoria-Phoenix plant, which is now the leading brewery of the district. The original brewery was located at Swan Lake, but in 1859 was removed to its present site on Government Street, which at that time was on the outskirts of the city.

CHANGES HANDS
In 1861 the ownership changed hands, passing into the possession of Laumeister and Loewen, who, in 1864, sold out to Loerts and Himmler. Under this management it continued until 1870, when it was purchased by Loewen and Erb, who continued until a joint stock company was formed in 1891. Two years later, in 1893, the company was formed with the Phoenix Brewing Co., and since then it has continued as the Victoria-Phoenix Brewing Co., Ltd.

PHOENIX MODERN BREWERY

Many changes have been made and the Victoria-Phoenix Brewery is one of the finest brewery plants in the country. The storage capacity for aging the product has been increased many times over, and it is now in the neighborhood of 10,000 barrels of twenty-five gallons each. The most up-to-date machinery now does the work of grinding the malt instead of the old horse grinder, and mashing by hand power is a thing of the past.

From the time the pure Canadian malt and British Columbia hops arrive in the brewery until the finished beer is bottled and packed in cases, cartons or barrels, every operation is done with scrupulous care and attention. Not only must the malt and hops be of the highest grade, but the brewing operations are conducted under close technical control, time and temperature playing an exceedingly important part.

NATURING WORT
Once brewing is complete, the wort, or new beer, must be fermented and aged in storage before it is ready for sale. In the fermentation and ageing process is developed the characteristic aroma and flavor of the product. The type of yeast and methods of fermentation and storage vary with each brewery, and it is the supervision of these factors which gives each brewery a distinctive product. Yeasts are living organisms of the vegetable kingdom, and their vigor, purity of strain and reproductive capacity greatly influence the finished product. The greatest care is taken in the Victoria-Phoenix plant to insure purity in the manufacture of the various brands, and nothing but the best of yeast and other materials are used.

Tompkins was passing the offertory bag in church when a woman hurried in. She walked quickly down the aisle, stopped by Tompkins, dropped a penny in the bag and moved to a seat.

"I say," he muttered, "why in the name of goodness do you come in here, drop a coin in the bag and then take it out again and leave?"

The woman shook him off indignantly. "I'm in the wrong church," she said.

Provision has been made in the canning and preserving of the different small fruits in season, thus allowing the plant to operate under a twelve-month schedule. Locally-grown produce is used, and the proximity to the source of supply on the Saanich Peninsula insures absolute freshness in every shipment of berries, and consequently the highest quality of produce results.

INCREASE IN PACK
Strawberries, loganberries, pears, raspberries, plums and cherries are put up in rotation, and an indication of the development of the firm is found in this year's figures. One hundred and fifty-four tons of loganberries were shipped out in comparison with fifty tons in 1930.

Perhaps the product which has won them the greatest reputation is that of clams, work on which is now in full swing. Whole clams, minced clams and the well-known clam nectar are produced in large amounts. Already the plant has put out 1,000 cases this season.

Employment is given to over forty workers throughout the year, varying with the different seasons. Recently a large warehouse was constructed, capable of storing some 15,000 cases, and every indication points to further expansion next Spring.

Similar progress is reported by The Holman Packing Company, situated at Lake Hill, while the name of J. H. Todd & Sons is a household word throughout Canada and the Pacific Coast in connection with the salmon packing.

Colorful Soho Home Of Many Races and Human Oddities

Elephants' Trunks, Tea-Leaves, Whiz Mobs and Copper's Narks Among Things and Persons Discussed and Met at Barmid's Arms

By NEIGLEY PARSON
(Special Correspondent of The Chicago Daily News Foreign Service. Copyright, 1931, The Chicago Daily News, Inc.)

LONDON.—"Elephants," said Mr. Kelley. "No, listen!" protested Mr. Epstein. "I see something about horse racing I know you. I see to him: 'Put a quid on the second favorite for me.' Now, there was two horses in that race at three to one, and one horse at seven to four. And the second favorite, sez I—"

"Elephants," said Mr. Kelley. "I'm not!" protested Mr. Epstein. "The cry 'elephants' is the beginning of a Soho phrase which insinuates that the person addressed is drunk."

Mr. Kelley was a red-necked man, 250 pounds, with, at the moment, a mild blue eye. He was leaning, as he had been all evening, against the electric automatic phonograph player of "The Barmid's Arms," in Soho.

BABEL OF TONGUES HERE
Soho, London's "little Europe," lively with Frenchmen, Italians, Greeks and Armenians—a colorful little oasis of less than ten miles square, dropped down in the very heart of London's shop and theatre district—whose interesting inhabitants only seem to get really wide awake when the Anglo-Saxon goes to bed at night. Soho, nest of cafes, coffee shops, cabarets, night clubs and sweatshops—respectable and otherwise in the fashionable West End of London makes excursions for a taste of foreign cooking and Bohemia; in Soho, too, every criminal class among London's 8,000,000 people has its own special rendezvous.

Soho, in truth, is a sort of spinney in London in which the criminal class has its lairs, although you would certainly fail to recognize the different species of game unless you happened to be in the company of a man whose business was hunting them. Mr. Kelley, such a detective, C.I.D. (criminal investigation department) man, from Scotland Yard, and tonight he was watching some pilot birds of big game, the scouts of a gang of smash-and-grab motor bandits.

PICKPOCKETS MEET HERE
"The Barmid's Arms," to the uninitiated, would be just a low pub with a very low class of customer in its crowded public bar. To those in the know it is the pet meeting place of a "whis mob" (gang of pickpockets) who, with some minor satellites of "tea leaves" and "copper's narks" (petty thieves and police informers). There was nothing in their tawdry garb to betray their profession. It was their manner. A combination of assertiveness and furtiveness—a sort of criminal inferiority complex. The dusky young lady, instance, who walked in and spotted Mr. Kelley, suddenly half-smothered their faces in their handkerchiefs, blowing their noses furiously, and quickly walked out again.

"Covering their dials," gurgled Mr. Epstein.

"Elephants," said Mr. Kelley.

"Please!" said Mr. Epstein.

TAKE LAST 'QUICK ONE'

Most of the "Barmid's Arms" customers were having a last "quick one" before seven o'clock closing time and going out to get work among the theatre crowds. The sleek limousines were even then pulling up in Shaftesbury Avenue, only one block away—Piccadilly Circus, two blocks off, was teeming with moviegoers on their way home; the clubmen of Pall Mall were having their last nightcap, but for Mr. Kelley—and for most of the gentlemen on the other side of the beer taps in the public bar—the day was only just starting.

Their talk was of horse racing, of boxing, of "the dog" (greyhound racing), so popular with London's underworld. Most of them were foreigners, for it is significant that they provide the recruits for the lower ranks of London's crime, while the higher places are filled by English and Americans.

LIVE JUST WITHIN THE LAW
On our side, the Family Bar, were those who lived within the law, noticeably, Mr. Epstein, who lived only just within it. For he was a barrow man, king of London's semi-illegal trade of push-cart fruit peddlers, whose 200 barrow boys (after he had paid their regular fines for "obstructing the traffic") had already earned him the reputed fortune of $100,000. Mr. Epstein didn't look like $100,000. I had taken him for one of the "tea leaves" until I chanced to notice his wife, counting up the day's takings having a "gin-and-it" at the table behind us.

"Look!" chirped up Mrs. Epstein, pointing to a man who was the $1,800 total. "They, you've made a bloomer!"

"Bloomers!" gurgled Mr. Epstein.

"Vimmin may rear dem, dearie—but I don't make 'em!"

"Elephants!" said Mr. Kelley.

ANNOUNCES CLOSING

"Time gentlemen and ladies!"

The diminutive chucker-out of "The Barmid's Arms" went about among its customers announcing the closing hour. "Time, please!"

NO LIMIT ON TIME TO GET COURT ORDER

British Supreme Court Gives Important Ruling on Divorce Cases

DELAY FOR THIRTY YEARS IS NOT A BAR

LONDON (CP).—An important ruling was given by the British Supreme Court recently on "stale" divorce cases, the court deciding that there was no time limit thereon and delay was not a bar. Some fifty law books dealing with marital cases were brought by counsel to the Supreme Court when Justice Gardiner and Justice Sutherland were asked to decide the important divorce problem as to whether there was any limit to the time in which a husband or wife could claim a restitution order, failing which divorce.

DESERVED LONG AGO

Two cases were argued by counsel that of George Davidson Carey, who was suing his wife, Mary Jane, for restitution, and that of Engela van der Nees against her husband, Nicolaas Jacobus Johannes van der Nees. Evidence was given that Mrs. Carey deserted her husband thirty-seven years ago. Mrs. van der Nees alleged that her husband deserted over thirty years ago.

In both cases Justice Gardiner questioned whether the court should assist in such "stale" divorces and postponed them to enable counsel to look up the authorities. Advocates appeared to argue the point. Justice Gardiner, dealing with Carey's case, held that the courts did not have a statutory discretion to refuse restitution orders if the desertion was many years old.

NO LEGAL GROUND

"The cases show that decrees have been granted after a long delay, and I cannot find any legal ground for refusing to grant a restitution order and finally decide," said the Judge-President. "I do not mean to say by way of evidence, bringing a matrimonial action may never affect the court's action, but it seems to me that if it affects it, it will do so by way of evidence. Delay is not a bar preventing the plaintiff from getting an order for restitution."

Carey was granted a restitution order. Justice Sutherland, granting Mrs. van der Nees an order, agreed with the reasons given by the Judge-President.

Exhibition of Needlecraft Is Largest Ever Promoted

Over Thousand Exhibits of Modern and Other Designs Shown in London—Some Interesting Pieces Loaned by Queen Mary

LONDON.—An exhibition of contemporary needlecraft, organized by Lady Eleanor Keane in aid of the National Council of Girls' Clubs, held under the patronage of the Queen, is the largest exhibition of the kind ever promoted. There are over 1,000 exhibits and more than 900 exhibitors, including women of all stations in life, and also a number of men. Many of the most beautiful pieces have been worked in the country; they range from exquisite petit point from country houses to fine examples of quilting from the drawing-rooms and villages.

QUEEN'S FINE PIECES
The Queen has lent some fine pieces from her collection. They include a handkerchief of fine linen embroidered with the Royal Coat of Arms and with a lace border; a sampler presented to Her Majesty by an old lady who signs herself "One of her subjects, Mary"; a book cover embroidered in metal thread and containing pictures of Royal residences; an embroidered cushion bought by the Queen at an exhibition in 1923; and a green velvet bag embroidered in gold which belonged to Queen Victoria. Princess Beatrice has lent a draught screen with embroidery on felt done by herself.

BEAUTIFUL COPIES
One of the rooms in the exhibition contains copies of Elizabethan, Jacobean, and Queen Anne work. The Elizabethan black and white work is of great beauty, and two other fine exhibits are a Jacobean portiere by Mrs. Green that is made in color and beautifully worked, and a Queen Anne bedspread with a petit point of Floor Cloth and landscape by the Duchess of Roxburgh, which won an award, is shown in the drawing-rooms.

AN AMUSING DESIGN
There is a fine display of furniture: Lady Violet Crawley has a chair in an amusing design showing the Chinese influence in the time of William and Mary in which great and petit point, and takes an award with a handsome cushion worked in old wool. Lady Fox has a couple of Cromwellian chairs in red velvet and mounted in velvet. Lord Gainsborough has worked a cushion, which is a copy of an old one showing a shepherdess soliloquizing with a lamb as audience. There is a chair seat by Sir John Burnett-Stuart, and handsome piece screen by Gertrude Hervey. Miss Constable shows a copy of a picture of Queen Elizabeth and a portrait of Mussolini.

Famous Miss England All Trim Again

THE last time Kaye Don's famous Miss England was seen in Canada was in Toronto when she had a huge gaping hole in the deck, caused when she capsized in the Detroit River during international speed races. Here is Don's Miss England as she appeared at Olympia Show, London, England, recently, all patched up.

PRINCE ENJOYS OYSTER FEAST

But Bemoans as One in the Business the Fisheries' Difficulties

Colchester's customary oyster feast differed in some respects from those of former years by reason of the fact that it was attended by the Prince of Wales.

The known disinclination of the Prince of Wales to attend festive gatherings during the present critical days led the promoters to associate with the usual oyster feast an effort on behalf of the Essex County Hospital, and the gathering was so much larger than usual that it had to be held in the Corn Exchange. Here some 600 people gave the Prince a very hearty welcome and consumed oysters from the local fisheries.

IN THE BUSINESS

The Prince of Wales has filled many roles, but now he appeared in a new one, introducing himself to those interested in the oyster fisheries of Colchester as a competitor to judge by the twinkle in his eye as he referred to his Duchy of Cornwall. He proceeded to speak of the prospects and difficulties of oyster fisheries with an assurance and knowledge rarely possessed by the guests at this annual feast.

Oyster fisheries, he said, had been doing very badly in recent years. They had had to meet keen competition both from Holland and France.

ABNORMAL MORTALITY
There had also been abnormal mortality among the oysters owing to disease, the origin and cause of which remained obscure, despite the scientific investigation experts had made.

Then there were the enemies which preyed on the oysters, the worst being the slippery limpet. Though the oyster fishery industry was doing far from well, he hoped the efforts which were now being made would soon restore its prosperity.

RAISING WALLS AGAINST ALIENS
New Restrictions in England to Keep Out Low-Priced Foreign Domestic Servants

LONDON (CP).—Protective walls against aliens are being raised by the Home Office, and officers who check the credentials of alien seeking work in this country have been instructed to tighten up the restrictions, with a view of decreasing cheap competition in the home labor market.

"The new restrictions," an officer said, "will apply particularly to Russian, German, Swiss and Belgian girls, who during the last few years have dominated the domestic servant market. These girls ask low wages. Many are well educated and take service in this country ostensibly to learn the language. They are not allowed to settle here indefinitely unless they marry British husbands, but when they return home their places are quickly filled by new arrivals."

"Many British housewives say they find these foreign girls industrious, honest and amenable to the discipline which they are employed by the thousand."

Island Natives Are Idle Rich
SYDNEY, Australia, Nov. 21.—Officers of a steamer which arrived here recently from the Pacific island of Nauru said the natives there all smoke expensive cigars, own their own automobiles, but have not worked for years.

The island is being worked for its phosphate deposits and most of the work on those projects is done by Chinese. Officials of the British Phosphate Commission supervise operations and the natives look on. They own the island and receive a royalty on every ton of phosphate mined.

Fierce Fisticuff Fight Unfinished After Forty Years
MERTHYR TYDFIL, Wales.—Forty years ago Jack Northy and George "Punch" Jones met in a fisticuff fight, to the finish. After nearly three hours Jones was blinded and unable to continue. A few months later they met again and neither won. Now the dispute has broken out again and they are planning to settle it with the gloves, once for all. They feel their lives wouldn't be complete with this unfinished business hanging on. Both are nearly seventy years old.

Says Old Methods Useless to Influence Young People

MANCHESTER (CP).—Ramblers going out on a hike on a Sunday morning, said Rev. F. Paton-Williams, rector of St. Ann's Church, Manchester, in speaking to Sunday school workers recently and appealing to them to modernize their lessons. It was not a little bit of using going to these people with the old methods. They left them cold. Religion had far too long been like the public parks—a place full of notices saying "Do not do this" and "Do not do that" until this generation had turned round and said "What the devil can we do?" The depression and plous tiffness of some religionists today stinked young life and made it-wild. It was no use saying "What was good enough for my father and my grandfather is good enough for them." It was not good enough for them, and ought not to be if the people of the present generation had advanced at all.

CORNERS WHOLE STAMP BLOCKS

London Dealer Puts Whole Fortune Into Collection of Abyssinian Issue

LONDON.—A London dealer has just put his entire private fortune into one block of foreign stamps, cornering the whole issues of Abyssinian stamps that preceded the new designs of which the Emperor Ras Tafari has approved.

The catalogue value of the purchase exceeds $25,000, and the collection includes some remarkable series, which reflect the history of Abyssinia since its admission into the union.

There are early stamps incorporating the symbolical Lion of Judah, others marking the memorable coronation of Ras Tafari and three sets which bear the official surcharge of the air mail.

Canadian Book Week Great Interest for Englishwomen

Three Noted Dominion Authors Represented in "Just Out" Publications—Produce Some Outstanding Work

LONDON (CP).—Canadian Book Week has special interest for women this year as three noted women (and others less famous) are represented in books just out. "Fitch's Fortune," by Maso de la Roche, has been a warm reception in England, and is recommended by the Book Society. The Sunday Times says "It is a keen and shrewd study of a real work of art."

While "The Graphic finds it 'full of astonishingly vivid evocation of place and personality.' The reviewer of the Times Literary Supplement says: "Mas de la Roche divides her time between Canadian Jaina and Aunt Augusta's Devon estate. Hymel Crews. But, like the Whitlocks, to Jaina she belongs, for there she is at her best and most characteristic. Yet at Jaina we are most aware of something lacking, of a sense of disintegration. Not even her creator can bring back into being that fierce gleam from Ireland, the indomitable Adeline."

FAMOUS OLD HOUSE
The Canadian "Jaina" near Clarkson, Ontario, is quite often sought out these days by those anxious to see the old house which Mas de la Roche chose as the setting for the tempestuous family of her imagination.

She has now an adopted family in the shape of a tiny boy and girl, Michael and Eame, who add greatly to her happiness in her life in England.

Leader Needed in Film Industry to Cultivate Empire

English Writer Points to Great Prize Awaiting British Producers Overseas—Americans in London Have Failed to Set Standard to Suit British Market

WRITING in The Daily Mail on the progress of the British film industry, Seaton Margrave gives some interesting facts and some valuable advice. He says, in part: It is to me a lamentable circumstance that there has not yet arisen within the British talking picture industry one man of Empire vision.

Within Britain itself, very remarkable things have been achieved. The talking picture industry has been consolidated into two great groups—on the one being the Gaumont British Pictures Corporation and the other being British International Pictures.

A LARGE FIELD
The Gaumont British Pictures Corporation controls 300 cinemas attended by 3,000,000 film-goers every week. These cinemas are capable of underwriting a talking picture costing £25,000. This corporation specializes in showing the product of the British and Dominions, Gainsborough, Gaumont, British Lion and Twickenham studios. It has been the chief bulwark in our defenses against American invasion. It is now being subjected to an intrigue designed to transfer it to American hands.

British International Pictures, with their vast Eclair studios, are allied to the film sales organization known as Wardour Films and to the 200 associated British cinemas. This group is physically smaller than the Gaumont group, but it has to its credit the remarkable achievement of having secured investment £5,000,000 in British talking pictures.

ARE SELF-CONTAINED
Both groups have this in common, that they are completely self-contained from the point of manufacture to the point of exhibition, which is the first basic principle on the road to entertainment.

But if we take a comprehensive Empire view of the duty and destiny of our talking picture industry, this is not enough.

Within the British Empire today there are more cinemas than in any other part of the world. Given complete Empire exhibition, with an adequate return to the producer, it would be possible to invest £100,000 in the making of one talking picture.

Two things are most urgently needed if this ideal is ever to be realized.

LEADER IS NEEDED
The first is a leader. This man should be someone of great experience in Empire affairs. He should be the head of a department collecting film data from every part of the Empire. Into this department should come some statistics as to the exact number of cinemas in every part of the Empire, with the total number of seats, average weekly attendances, and average prices of admission.

This department ought to know how cinemas in the Empire are controlled, what cinemas are friendly to British talking pictures, and what cinemas are hostile.

NEED EMPIRE THEMES
If the ideal of the Empire exhibition of British talking pictures is to be realized, we must have talking pictures based on inspirational Empire themes. That is urgent and unavoidable. It is, in fact, the essence of the whole matter.

PREPARING NEW BIBLE EDITION

Afrikaans Edition to Be Published Next Year by Special Request

CAPTOWN (CP).—A great event for the Dutch-speaking section of the community as well as for the philologists interested in developments in Afrikaans, according to The Cape Argus, of Cape Town, will be the appearance of the first complete Bible printed in that language. There seems to be two versions of the Bible in Afrikaans, but Rev. F. M. Steyn, local secretary of the Bible Society, states his organization is only concerned with the official version to be published next year.

Since the recent Afrikaans revival there has been a clamor for a new edition of the Bible. Nearly ten years ago an attempt was made, confined to the Gospels and Psalms. At that time Afrikaans was less standardized than it is today, both in regard to vocabulary and spelling. Criticism was leveled at the work, which suffered from a drawback in that the translation had been made from the old Dutch text. It was then realized that the only satisfactory way would be to obtain a retranslation and this time from the original languages—Hebrew and Greek.

By request of the Dutch churches the British and Foreign Bible Society took the work in hand. A committee was appointed and five well-known theologians agreed to perform the task. They are: Rev. Dr. J. K. Dettl, of Bloemfontein; Professor Dr. du Toit (Totius), the author; Professor van Rooyen and Professor Keet, of the Seminary, Stellenbosch, and Dr. H. C. M. Fourie, a prominent Transvaal divine. These men collaborated and have been at work for some years.

NEWSBOY AT PALACE
FACES OWN CRISIS

LONDON.—Alec Visard, thirteen-year-old, low-headed newsboy to Buckingham Palace, is facing an economic crisis of his own. Alec delivers papers at the palace every morning on roller skates. But school authorities say he is too young to be working so early in the morning. School children are not supposed to do any work before 7 a.m., and then only with a doctor's certificate.

Alec earns about sixty cents weekly and turns it over to his mother, a widow.

News From Here and There Across Canada

Privation Is No Deterrent Noted Author Reveals

Leslie McFarlane, Successful Canadian Writer, Once Was on the Verge of Starvation—Wealth of Experiences in Various Walks of Life Gives Author Almost Unlimited Supply of Material

By FREDERICK WILLIAM WALLACE
(Special to The Colonist)

LESLIE MCFARLANE is a Canadian fiction writer who is coming along fast. He has just turned 27, and if he can maintain the pace he has already set, there is no telling where he may land. He has energy, imagination, the gift of telling a story well, and, above all, originality.

As an old-timer in the writing game I have seen a number of the craft come and go. Very few made a hit; most made a miss. But McFarlane seems to have sailed into the limelight on the crest of the wave. Some of his short stories have been accounted as gems in Canadian fiction, he has been a prize-winner in national contests, his work has been starred and triple-starred by Arbiters O'Brien and some items have been embalmed in anthologies. All of which will be encouraging to a youngster like McFarlane.

USED MAIL FREELY

But success is seldom attained by merely exercising inherent ability. McFarlane has gone through the mill and come out ground. He left school determined to be a writer and started out in the way most of us do. He saw his brain-child coming back and coming back. But he had a great faith in himself and courage enough to believe that if he stuck at it long enough and turned out enough stories some of them would surely be accepted. And that is the key to success in the writing game. For if a man will stick it, he will ultimately develop a style and a facility in the creation of plots that will bring a demand for his work.

He has been a newspaper reporter on both Canadian and American papers. That was the meat ticket. In his off hours he wrote fiction and more fiction with the idea of getting a market and launching out as a free lance. He wrote on every conceivable subject under the sun, but latterly found himself specializing in yarns of the North woods and mystery fiction.

LIVE OUTDOORS

For three summers he lived in a shack on the shore of a North lake, doing his own thing—when ever there was anything to cook—and writing from morning until night. He still craves at the recollection of his plight, and to a student of the life of a writer, the last cigarette had been smoked, the last grain of tobacco had vanished from the pouch. It was a serious matter. Incidentally, he had been living on beans for breakfast, dinner and supper for an entire week and what remained in the canister rattled with a hollow sound. He didn't mind that so much. But how can one write without tobacco? He decided to go to town on the off-chance that there might be some mail, so he went through the bush, to the railway track, down the track and out to the main road, where to his surprise he found a mail box.

MAN OF COURAGE

But the man who has persistency and courage enough to go through this trying period usually emerges with something worth while. Poverty is a great stimulant. It is the opinion of many well-known men in campus circles that the women of McGill will soon supplant the men in the control of the Students' Society—a privilege which men have long enjoyed. Not till a woman becomes president of the society will the men be able to sit back and take notice that their long-expected rights are being controlled by the fair sex, and then it will be too late.

The young women only secured the right to sit in the councils of the Students' Society last year.

QUEBEC WOMEN SEEK FRANCHISE

Except for Vote, One Year Moratorium on Feminist Programme Declared

MONTREAL, Que. (CP).—A one-year moratorium, a la Hoover, on everything in the feminist programme except the vote, was proclaimed for the benefit of the Quebec Legislature by M. Pierre F. Casgrain, president of the League for Women's Rights, in a recent address inaugurating a series of suffrage talks.

PLACE NAMES IN MAGDALEN ISLANDS

OTTAWA.—Brien Island and Bird Rocks are the earliest names of the Magdalen Islands, Quebec, and date from Jacques Cartier's voyage in 1534. To Champlain, states the Geographic Board of Canada's report on the Magdalen Islands, seems to be due the name, Magdalen. His map of 1571, the first to show it. In 1671, in the first edition of "Sailing Directions for the Gulf and River of St. Lawrence," Breyer, the British admiral, says that the name was first used in 1571. The admiral's chart was made in 1638, based on the surveys carried out by Lieut. P. E. Collins, R.N., under Havelock's direction. In 1833, it is on these charts that most of the place-names in use in the Magdalen Islands today are first found. It may be added that the Holland survey of the Magdalen Islands was part of the British Empire in North America undertaken by the British Government after the treaty of Paris in 1763.

MONTREALER PRIZES GIFTS FROM EDISON

Possesses One of First Gramophones Made by Thomas Edison

LETTERS ALSO ARE CHERISHED

MONTREAL, Que. (CP).—Some treasured possessions, gifts of the late Thomas Alva Edison to a young Canadian girl, are now in the hands of her second husband, Hayter Reed, of this city. Among them are two personal letters from Edison, Miss Armour, the Canadian girl referred to, known and loved by a host of Montrealers and noted for her talented work in interior decoration in many hotels operated by the Canadian Pacific Railway, of which Mr. Reed was an official, she paid many visits to the Edison laboratories at Menlo Park.

FINANCED RESEARCH

The late Mrs. Hayter Reed, whose first husband was Grosvenor P. Lowrey, associate and friend of Edison, Miss Armour, the Canadian girl referred to, known and loved by a host of Montrealers and noted for her talented work in interior decoration in many hotels operated by the Canadian Pacific Railway, of which Mr. Reed was an official, she paid many visits to the Edison laboratories at Menlo Park.

TRAINED LETTERS

Throughout these days, the late Mrs. Reed (then Miss Armour) continued to pay visits to Edison, "the wizard of Menlo Park." Edison at one time laughingly proposed "taking her into partnership." It was no mean tribute to her intelligence when William Meadowcroft, the inventor's right-hand man, wrote to her: "I never heard him (Edison) refer to any woman a second time, but he has been asking all about you."

These letters of Edison's addressed to Miss Armour are now in the possession of Hayter Reed, her second husband, who also treasures one of the pioneer photographs turned out by the inventor, which still functions. They are no less valued by Mr. Reed's son, John D. Lowrey, of this city, and by his stepbrother, Gordon Reed.

With the passing of the great inventor and of Mrs. Reed, the photographs and letters will probably be the belief in Edison by a Canadian girl and her husband at a time when all others but his immediate associates predicted failure for his enterprises.

DEBATERS BREW CUBAN TROUBLE

McGill Students Visit Porto Rico Oblivious of Threatening Revolution

MONTREAL.—The recent trip of a team of McGill debaters to Porto Rico was indirectly the cause of a possible revolution, according to reports received by these McGill students from Porto Rican friends made during their visit but a few weeks ago. The McGill men were in no way to blame, however, for it appears that a select reception committee was appointed to welcome them to the island on behalf of the revolution. The committee was named by representatives of the Nationalist party, not students of negro blood. The latter groups were greatly incensed at what they considered an insult and drew up a monster petition which they sent to the chancellor of the University of Porto Rico, Dr. Carlos Chardon.

The chancellor at once suspended about 200 students for periods ranging from two years to life, and there followed a terrific outcry all over the island. So serious did matters become that the chancellor decided to reinstate most of the petitioners, although a few remain unpardoned and without the university walls.

HISTORIC LANDMARK PREY TO WRECKERS

TORONTO.—At one time a centre of social activity, when the residents of what was then known of as York were accustomed to gather around its open fireplaces to discuss the events of the progressive life community, the old dwelling house placed in the hands of the wreckers. One of the oldest landmarks in Toronto situated near the first Parliament Building was being dismantled by the wreckers. The house, which had been built in 1810, was being dismantled by the wreckers. Peace Time Aviation

THE vast northern wastes of Canada, long looked upon with fear and dread by prospectors and adventurers, need no longer be held in such awe. For Canadian Government cartographers are busy—and have been since the war—photographing nearly the whole of Canada. Guides heading north can now be supplied with maps of almost every region, and the possibility of getting lost is slim. Above is a government cartographer adjusting his camera in readiness for a hazardous journey over the wilds.

Bear Lake Is Ready for Spring Rush to Latest Gold Mining Discovery

WATERWAYS, Alta. (CP).—Although Great Bear Lake, centre of latest mining finds which is expected a big rush in the Spring, is the most northerly of Canada's inland seas, it is far from difficult of access. It offers several very interesting features for transport work, which are already being developed in preparation for the expected rush.

DRILLING STARTED

The pioneer companies naturally have a considerable advantage in their knowledge of the country and their geological data is jealously guarded; but many of the new comers from other fields have simply camped and staked. The diamond drilling and blasting that has been carried out during the past summer on several properties has shown results which, while still unofficial, are known to have more than borne out the first hopes of their discoverers.

Gasoline, at present, costs $3.15 a gallon, and food averages about $2 a pound; but with increasing volume of business, the rates for passengers and freight will come down, and the coming year, depression or no depression, the hitherto unexplored natural resources of the Great Bear country show every indication of at last coming into their own.

ALEUTIANS ARE SHIPPING WOOL

Vancouver Becomes Gathering Centre for Sheep Raiser's Exportations

VANCOUVER (CP).—The Aleutian Islands, once regarded as almost valueless, are becoming an important factor in the North Pacific wool trade. Twenty-five tons of the wool has been in the hands of the Aleutians were brought south recently and turned over to the Pacific Co-operative Wool Growers.

NEW LIEUT.-GOVERNOR OF NOVA SCOTIA

MONTREAL, Que. (CP).—Ancient scows which once were drawn through the canals of Quebec province and the New England States, now of no further service, are being put to good use. A number of these vessels, together with a quantity of broken-up lumber, were recently given to the Army and Navy Veterans in Canada.

HONKS $10 HORN IN POLICE COURT

TORONTO.—Magistrate Jones' ire was aroused in traffic court recently when W. Langston Palmer appeared for making a right hand turn in front of a city car.

"The cars behind me were honking their horns," Palmer explained. "And I am going to honk my horn right now," retorted the magistrate. "I fine you $10."

Nitro-Glycerin Found in Bottle On Quebec Street

MONTREAL.—A bottle of mysterious liquid caused considerable perturbation in the building of the corner's court here recently when a woman who had just come from Quebec City, where she had found the bottle, handed it in, thinking that perhaps Dr. Demore or Dr. Fontaine, the city's medico-legal experts, might wish to analyze it. When Dr. Fontaine saw it he immediately discovered that it was nitro-glycerin. The laboratory quietly but quickly emptied and the doctor was left alone to rid himself and the community of the liquid, which was present in the bottle in sufficient quantity to blow up the block, not to mention the adjacent Courthouse.

Grandfather Of Lobsters Is Captured

DIGBY, N.S.—What is believed to be the granddaddy of Western Nova Scotia lobsters was caught in a trawl of a Digby fisherman this week a few miles out from the harbor. The gigantic shellfish was three feet in length, with claws ten and one-half inches long and seven and one-half inches wide. The lobster weighed twenty-five pounds and was considered a pretty good feast.

NEW INSANITY CURE FOUND

Treatment Proves Effective in Certain Cases, Physicians Say

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Nov. 17 (AP).—The story of a man aroused in four minutes from eight months' stupor by a new insanity treatment for the first time at the National Academy of Sciences at Yale University today.

TESTED THE DISCOVERY

Results of the new method upon forty-one persons in Willard State Hospital were reported by H. Beckel, M.D., and John A. Peterson, M.D. They tested the discovery announced last Spring by Dr. William D. Barratt, of the Cornell chemistry department.

The man who "came back" was listed as an alcoholic. Dr. Lang said he had been in a stupor, was depressed, generally untidy, had to be coaxed to eat and was fearful, but could give no excuse for fear.

He was given sodium amylal and within three minutes showed slight restless movements. "In four minutes he was talking distinctly and responded promptly to commands," Dr. Beckel said. "Later he became awake, slept normally and awoke refreshed."

Improvement lasted only during the effects of the drug, but the treatment revealed that alcoholism was not his real trouble. He had a dual personality case.

Another alcoholic was treated, receiving sodium rhodanate, and showed definite improvement. A few of the insane recovered sufficiently to be paroled home.

Butter Record IS PROBABLY

Alberta's Dairy Industry Is Staging Remarkable Comeback This Year

EDMONTON, Alberta (CP).—Creamery butter production in the province of Alberta this year will probably set a new record, according to Dr. Mark, Provincial Commissioner, who states that the output is now thirty-two per cent greater than last year at this time.

The Edmonton Journal, in an editorial announcing that Alberta's dairy industry is staging a remarkable comeback, states that the highest figures to date, 22,339,857 pounds, was reached. In the first full year of the province's existence, 1906, it was less than 2,000,000, and the advance had been almost continuous, setbacks having occurred in only two years. It was accordingly very disappointing to have a retrogression after 1924, until in 1928 the total had fallen to 14,375,636. Thus a large amount of ground has been regained in three years.

OTTAWA, Nov. 21 (SNS).—Canada's Northland is being invaded by mining prospectors in vast numbers. They go by canoe and airplane. They go into regions which a few years ago were practically unknown, regions about which even the maps were hazy. Today they go into some of these regions armed with maps so accurate that the chance of becoming lost in the Northland is now very slim.

ANCIENT STOCK PAYS DIVIDEND

Descendants Receive Return on Investment After Four Decades

KITCHENER, Ont. (CP).—A dividend cheque—after thirty-nine years—from stock long forgotten, was the pleasant surprise received by the Newberry family, Williamsburg, of which Henry Newberry is a descendant. Mr. Newberry received the cheque from an English company on stock in an English firm owned by his father.

Canadians will remember Jabez Balfour, English company promoter, and his failure and flight, which spelled ruin for many persons in the financial crisis of 1891. His escape lasted but one year and he was brought back to England in 1892 from South America, convicted and sentenced to the penitentiary. The investors, in order to salvage what they could from Balfour's most ambitious scheme, formed a new company, the Liberator Building Society. The assets included a block of unfinished buildings between the Strand and Thames Embankment, London. The block was finished and became the site of the Hotel Cecil, the first of London's modern hotels. The new enterprise, although a big hotel—paid no dividends throughout the two decades, and last year it was taken over by the City of London. It was sold at the time that it was possible to pay a dividend to the members of the company, or their descendants.

BOYS FAST TO SUCCOR POOR

Farming Students Go Short of Meals to Provide Food for Montreal's Hungry

MONTREAL (CP).—One hundred and fifty boys from the Shawbridge Boys' Farm and Training School, naturally hungry in the winter atmosphere of the Laurentian Mountains of Quebec, voluntarily went without three meals during one week short of school with the result that a truck load of food was sent into Montreal to help feed the unemployed. The arrival of the truck at headquarters of the employment Relief Committee was a big surprise to the workers there, who expressed their deep appreciation of the spirit of sacrifice and desire to help shown by the lads.

The boys at the school had seen by the papers that people in Montreal were having a hard time of it through unemployment, and that there were appeals being made for assistance. Their contribution consisted of eighty pounds of beef, four tons of corned beef, three bags of potatoes, one bag of turnips, fifty-six pounds of rice, fifty pounds of peas, fourteen pounds of white sugar, ten pounds of bacon, one bag of carrots, two bags of cabbage, one bag of beets, fifty-six pounds of beans, forty-five pounds of rolled oats, one bag of flour, fourteen pounds of brown sugar, and six bags of salt.

The boys, who were quite keen about the contribution, have asked that they be allowed to make a similar one in the near future.

Tiny Sacks of Grain Shipped As Publicity

WINNIPEG, Man. (CP).—Tiny sample sacks of grain—silent salesmen from the wheat fields of Western Canada—today are Europe-bound seeking to preserve and increase Canada's position in the wheat market of the world. The shipment was arranged by the Board of Grain Commissioners and the small bags are on their way to grain markets in Great Britain, France, Belgium, Holland, Germany and Italy.

These sample sacks are annually made up by the Western Grain Standards Committee, in Winnipeg. They contain grain from practically every district in the Prairie West and give a fair indication of the quality of wheat which the European consumer might expect in the filling of large orders. Specimens of each grade are included. Before shipment is authorized, each sample is analyzed and approved by Dr. J. Birchard, chief chemist of the Board of Grain Commissioners' research laboratory.

She Wasn't Jealous

Wherein a Boy Discovers the Secret of True Love

By DUNCAN NORTON-TAYLOR

Illustrated by James Hammon

POLLY Dibble lay full length on the float in the warm sun, her arms folded under her chin. Her glance wandered across that end of Lake Manuka to the Moffitts' point. There, easily visible, was a hammock under the pine trees, and sticking up from it a pair of flannelled legs that belonged to Wiff Moffitt.

She saw a figure in a red bathing suit coming out of the Moffitts' cottage. The flannelled legs were lowered and Wiff Moffitt's head and shoulders appeared; he was looking at the figure in red—Jeanie, his small sister. Then he vanished again into the comfortable sag of the hammock and Jeanie ran out on the Moffitts' dock, dived in and started for the float.

Polly looked disgruntled. Wiff had told her he was going swimming.

Musingly she watched the hammock. She was concerned about Wiff. It seemed to her that he ought to be thinking about his career. She had made some hints that were rather broad and he had told her unconcernedly that he was resting up after college; he would start work in September. Real estate, maybe. Apparently he thought it did not matter to her. But it did matter, though she would not admit why, even to herself.

A sleek head appeared at the edge of the float and Jeanie Moffitt crawled over the side and flopped down beside Polly.

"That's some swim for a girl of ten," she gasped.

"Isn't Wiff coming in?" Polly asked.

"No. I told him I was and he went out and lay down in the hammock. He told me just now to tell you he changed his mind." Jeanie looked over at the hammock and snorted. "He gets me sick. He's probably lying there thinking about her."

For an instant Polly was puzzled. Finally she asked in a small voice:

"Who's that?"

"Good night! Haven't you heard of Carol Louise Brewster?" Jeanie's interjection expressed both surprise that anyone should not have heard of Carol Louise Brewster, and, for her own part, a very low personal opinion. "She and Wiff are engaged."

"Engaged?" Polly's fists were pressed hard into her cheeks.

"Well, Wiff thinks he is. They haven't announced anything about it, but he got her a ring right away when he got out of college." Jeanie expanded. "She got out this year, too, and her father gave her a trip to Europe. Now Wiff's been mooning around in a dumb way for about a week because she wrote to him and said she was coming down." Jeanie sighed. "She's supposed to get here tomorrow."

Polly clenched her fists tighter. What is this Brewster girl like?

"Oh, she's high hat." Jeanie wagged her head and slicked her wet hair back of her ears in what was probably supposed to be an imitation of Miss Brewster. "If you ask me, she's a pain in the neck."

"Is she—what does she look like?"

"Blonde. Quite tall. She doesn't look so bad, I guess. Wiff thinks she's wonderful." Polly concentrated on the white dock in front of her own house. At length she asked in an even voice:

"When are they going to get married?"

"Wiff says this fall. I guess he'll sell real estate. Her father's going to give him a job. Then he wants to get married. I think it'll be a good thing because maybe after he's married he'll stop acting like such a fish when he's around her."

"Oh! How do you mean?"

"He's always playing with her fingers and kissing her ear. You know, things like that." Jeanie wrinkled her small nose. "It's disgusting."

There was a long silence. "I'll bet it is," Polly murmured. She stood up. "I'm going off the high dive. Then I've had enough."

She ran up the ladder and walked out on the springboard. She rose on her toes, leaped cleanly out and plopped into Lake Manuka. Jeanie did what she called a "belly tender" over the side of the float and together they started for the shore.

They waded up on the strip of sandy beach midway between the Moffitts and the Dibbles.

"What time does this girl get here—on the morning or afternoon train?" Polly asked.

"Morning."

"You better not tell Wiff you told me about her."

"Don't worry," Jeanie said vehemently. "He gets sore when I talk about his affairs."

"All right, Jeanie," Polly turned and ran up the beach before Wiff's sister should see that she was getting ready to cry.

Wiff Moffitt watched Polly's slim figure until she was out of sight around the point and then he lowered one leg so his toe just scuffed the ground and rocked the hammock gently back and forth. He scowled up into the black pine trees. He was vaguely upset about Polly. She was wild and impulsive and he liked her eyes and her hair. He had kissed her a couple of times, half humorously. They had bumbled around together all summer and he had taken her to dances at the club. Lord—there was a dance tomorrow night and probably she assumed he was going to take her.

Jeanie just then came running up from the lake.

"You're certainly lazy," she said. "Why didn't you come in swimming?"

Wiff grunted. "You weren't swimming much. What were you doing out on the float?"

"Chatting with Polly," she said with a supercilious air and ran on up to the cottage. Wiff lay and pondered. He ought to have told Polly in the beginning. But everything was so casual; he would have appeared ridiculous. Then Carol had written she was coming. He had tried all week to tell Polly, but something had always come up. He had decided he would bring it up swimming this afternoon. And Jeanie had butted in.

He told himself truthfully that Carol Louise would not be silly about it. Carol Louise was an admirably level-headed girl.

broad-minded. She herself had said when they became engaged, "Let's be sensible. Let's not be childish and jealous."

That was the way he felt. This stuff about not looking at another woman because you were engaged was old-fashioned. He wouldn't want to marry a woman who wasn't broad-minded. His theories about marriage were

At Shook's, the general store across from the railroad station, Polly jumped out with the kerosene can before Wiff could offer. She told Jake Shook she would pick it up later, climbed back into the car and turned down the state road.

Wiff suddenly broke the silence. "Where're you going?"

At That Moment, Over Carol's Shoulder, He Saw Her—Saw Polly Coming in With Chubby Thompson. He Felt Somehow Annoyed.

broad-mindedness. You had to be rational. It was Carol's theory, too.

He had met Carol during his junior year at college. Then toward the end of his senior year, seriously impressed at the thought that he was about to step out into the world, he had asked her to marry him. She had said yes, gravely, aware of the importance of things yet not foolishly sentimental.

Then her father had offered to take Wiff into his real estate business. That was the real reason he was at Lake Manuka. He couldn't decide about his life work. He preferred something more vital. Aviation. He would like to get into aviation.

He lifted his broad shoulders out of the swing, planted his long legs on the ground and trudged up to the cottage. That night after supper he walked over to the Dibbles. Their place was dark. They must have gone down to Birdseye to the movies. He walked home again complacently smoking his pipe.

The Dibbles as a matter of fact had gone to the movies. That is, Mr. and Mrs. Dibble, and young David. Polly was sitting down by the edge of the lake, hidden from the cottage by a tree. She was listening to the looms while she alternately denounced men, wept her heart out and plotted.

Wiff woke up the next morning with a faint sense of guilt. With the arrival of Carol now suddenly at hand he could not procrastinate longer. He ate breakfast hurriedly, peremptorily told Jeanie to quit hanging around him and strode down the log path that led to the road.

Just then Polly's station wagon appeared around a bend and came to a stop at the end of the path.

"Where you going?" she asked.

"I was just going down to see you."

Wiff decided that he would tell her right away. He put one foot on the running board, smiled confidentially and carefully cleared his throat.

But she said quickly:

"I've got to go to Birdseye for some kerosene. Ride down with me."

And Wiff had no choice. He had to catch the side and hold himself in or be thrown into the ditch, for the station wagon lurched forward. He dropped down beside her with a sigh.

The Manuka Lake Road is full of ruts and boulders and winds perilously through the woods. Polly leaned over the wheel. The wind, unchecked because the windshield was broken out, whipped her black hair back from her intent little face.

"I've got to be back to get our car," he said, "and meet the eleven o'clock train."

"You don't have to go back to get your car. We can meet the train in this. Who's coming?"

"A—friend," he said unsuspectingly. If she'd slow down, he'd tell her all about it—tell her truthfully.

Her eyes were fastened on the road. Her silence was a question.

"She's my friend," he said inanely and then blurted out: "She's—she's my fiancée."

They bumped along the road. She made no comment. Wiff was dumb, wishing he could recall those abrupt words and say them over again with a little more elegance. They rode the last two miles down the mountain in silence, and drove into Birdseye sitting side by side. Polly's face blank, Wiff looking vexed, both still mute.

"For a ride—until the train comes."

He looked at his wrist watch. It was ten o'clock. They were rolling down the highway with a racket that was all the little car's noises merged into one.

"Maybe I better go back and get our car," he ventured.

"You don't want me to meet her, do you?"

"Why shouldn't I want you to meet her? I do want you to meet her."

The casual tone that he tried to affect was not successful.

"I just thought you might not."

"Well, I do; I want you to."

"I bet she won't be so crazy to meet me."

"Polly, that's foolish. Carol probably assumes I've been going around with other girls."

"Where're we going now?"

She had turned off the state highway over the railroad onto a dirt road that winds up the mountains on the other side of Birdseye.

"You've just been going around with me," she said profoundly. "That is different from going around with a lot of girls."

He felt uncomfortable and embarrassed.

"Oh, phaw! I don't see that. I know Carol doesn't care. She probably has been going around with other men. Lord—I wouldn't expect her to stay in all the time just because she's engaged to me. That is the way we feel about it." He waved his hand comprehensively. "They don't have these old-fashioned ideas any more."

"Who?"

"People—everybody. Modern people. I didn't think you were so old-fashioned."

"Me? Oh, I'm just wondering about this girl you've been two-timing all summer."

"For gosh sakes, I haven't been two-timing her!"

"You kissed me a couple of times," she said calmly.

Wiff in confusion looked at the road. They were well up the long climb, jolting over the ruts and racing through dark pine woods that shrouded the summit.

"Where're we going, anyhow?"

"I've made up my mind to tell her about you taking me out. I think she ought to know about me."

He looked distressed.

"Polly, for gosh sakes, quit being so—so dramatic."

"I'm not being dramatic," she declared.

"You are. You talk like a melodrama. We've just been bumbling around together this summer and having a good time. You know that."

"He became exaggeratedly bewildered. "I don't see how a girl today could get a slant like you have. I really don't. We've—we've—well, you could say we've just been pals. That's the way you and I have been. Pals. Be sensible, Polly. You've got to admit—"

He stopped, for the engine had given a small cough. He sat up and peered at his watch.

"Say!" he exclaimed. "It's ten-thirty. Good gosh, turn around."

"We've got lots of time."

"No, we haven't. Turn around here."

Obediently she slowed down and swung the station wagon over. She had got it half around, square across the road, when the engine coughed again, this time very emphatically and then slowly, maddeningly died.

They were in the midst of a sudden startling silence. For a moment Wiff stared at the hood as if expecting the motor to come miraculously to life, then he turned to Polly in dismay.

"What the heck—"

"I guess we're out of gas."

"Out of gas! I've got to be at the station at eleven. How'd you know we're out of gas?"

She shrugged, quite unperturbed. "That's the way it always acts when it's empty. Look and see."

He climbed out of the car, and strode around to examine the gas tank. It was empty, all right.

"How far as we from Birdseye?" he demanded.

"Oh, I imagine about ten miles."

"Ten miles! I can never make it." Indignantly: "What are we going to do?"

"Walk," Polly suggested. She got out. "Help me push the junk over by the side of the road."

A few minutes later they were hiking down the road, Wiff, sputtering and wrathful, worriedly puffing his pipe. Polly trudged along with an inscrutable face.

It was six miles over the mountain road to the state highway. They had small hope of getting a lift before that.

Wiff had on sneakers. He began to limp. He stopped frequently and rested, sitting by the road and exploring his blistered feet.

Presently he became aloof and at one of their rests he stood up and faced Polly.

"It was a frame, wasn't it?" he said in a cold voice. "You knew you were going to run out of gas. You got me out here so I wouldn't meet the train."

Polly gazed up, defiant.

"Maybe . . . yes, it was."

"What was the idea? Did you think you'd start a fight between Carol and me?"

"I thought I might get your goat."

"You did." He looked at her scornfully.

"You know what I think? I think you're jealous!"

She jumped up, crimson, her fists clenched.

"You concealed good! Why should I be jealous? I did it because I owed it to you for—not telling me you were engaged. Sure—I knew all about this Brewster woman before we started. Jeanie told me yesterday. And she'll find out you're with me because she'd ask at Shook's where you are and Jake'll be sure to tell her. That's why I left the car there—"

"I suppose you think Carol will be jealous. Well, she won't."

And Wiff turned his back on her and marched off. Polly, her face angry and set, trailed along behind. And they maintained that order.

They reached a point where the trees thinned out and they could see the railroad in the valley. About two miles yet. Polly figured they had been walking almost an hour. She thought grimly: Carol Louise would just now be giving Wiff up and asking at Shook's how she could get into Manuka.

It was almost noon before they reached the state road. A farmer with a truckload of potatoes picked them up and took them into Birdseye.

And there Wiff got Jake Shook to take them the rest of the way. Wiff sat up in front with Jake.

"I had a load up to Manuka from the train," Jake remarked. "Young lady said she was lookin' for you but finally gave up."

Wiff grunted and maintained a gloomy silence until they reached the Moffitts' cottage.

He climbed out, paid Jake to take Polly up to her place and limped down the path to the house. Wiff's brow was furrowed and he looked dogged.

He went in. They were all at lunch, his mother and father and Jeanie. He saw Carol.

She turned her blonde head as he appeared, regarded him calmly with her blue eyes. He saw that she was smiling. He saw that she was stretching her fingers out in delicate greeting. Poised, self-possessed. She was always poised.

"Hello, there," she cried.

"Carol—gosh—I'm sorry—"

He hurried to her, kissed her awkwardly, feeling a little embarrassed before his family.

"Where on earth have you been?" Mrs. Moffitt exclaimed. "Carol had to get Shook to bring her up."

Carol said graciously, "It was perfectly all right, Mrs. Moffitt."

Wiff sank down in the chair beside her.

"We ran out of gas on the road to Shiloh. I'm sorry as the deuce I wasn't at the station."

"Did you have to walk far, Wiff?"

"Yes—about six miles."

"You must be starved."

"I am."

He began to eat, with a sense of relief.

Carol patted her perfect lips with her napkin.

"It was telling them about Vienna."

He hardly heard what she said. He was promising himself that he would tell her everything as soon as he could.

After lunch, alone with her on the porch, he explained all about the ride with Polly—with one notable exception; he did not mention that Polly had planned it. But he told her that he had been taking Polly around that summer. She was not a bit upset.

"I didn't expect you to be a hermit down here," she said laughing.

"Do you really forgive me for not meeting you?"

She said: "Of course; don't be silly."

"Well, I could see how you might be pretty mad when you consider that we haven't seen each other for about a month, and then I was out riding with another girl when you got here."

"Heavens, Wiff, I'm not a child to get mad about a thing like that."

"Well, I'm glad you're sensible. Even smaller things than that get some women all upset—jealous."

"I think jealousy is infantile."

Wiff nodded, though he felt vaguely dissatisfied.

That evening they went to the dance in the outboard motorboat. Wiff started for the Manuka Club but on a sudden impulse changed his course and headed in to the opposite shore.

He shut the motor off when they got under the bowing trees. Carol, blonde and lovely, sat on the middle thwart.

"It's nice in here," he murmured.

"Yes."

He looked at her, then turned and adjusted the spark on the motor.

"Well, I guess we better get along."

They spluttered out onto the lake with a racket that shattered the silence.

He found a place among the small boats strung along the dock, made fast, and they went up to the club.

Carol Louise danced skillfully and impersonally.

"It's been a long time since we danced together," he said.

"It is. Not since Commencement."

"Do you remember that night?"

"Yes," she said lightly.

He danced in silence. That was the night he had given her the ring.

He glanced round the floor. Nearly the whole lake colony was there. But he did not see Polly.

"I'll never forget that night," he said.

At that moment he saw her—saw Polly coming in with a man they called Chubby Thompson. He knew this Chubby of old, for Chubby had persistently cut in on him at dances when he had had Polly. He guessed that Chubby had lost no time asking Polly to go with him once it had got around that he wasn't taking her. He felt somehow annoyed.

He looked down at Carol.

"There's this girl—Polly," he said conscientiously. "See? The girl with the sort of yellow dress coming in now."

Carol Louise gazed appraisingly.

"She's cute," she said. She looked up at him and laughed. "What's this going to be, darling, more of the big confession?"

"No," Wiff answered. "I just thought you'd like to—to see her."

He felt abashed and was silent the rest of the dance.

Some time later in the evening he lost her on account of the informal custom at the canoe club of cutting in, and he wandered out on the front porch. He stood apart from the others who were out there, in the shadow, smoking with quick emphatic gestures and staring out over the lake.

Finally he flipped his butt over the railing and went in. He was searching the crowded floor, his face set and serious, when he spied Polly. He ran forward and cut in on her.

Her hair was perfumed. He glanced down but he could not see her face because it was turned away. Both her small hands were against his chest, clenched, pushing him, but he held her tightly and she had no choice.

"I want to talk to you, Polly," he whispered. She did not answer. They were dancing by the door to the porch.

With his arm still firmly about her, suddenly he swung her lightly outside.

"I don't want to talk to you," she said savagely.

"Don't make a scene."

He glanced about nervously, grasping her arm, half pulled at her down the steps.

"Let me go," she said through her teeth.

She tried to get free and kicked him. Grimly he held on. They were hidden now in the darkness at the side of the porch.

He pulled her along the dock out to where his boat was tied up.

"Now," he said menacingly, "shall I dump you in bodily, or will you step in like a lady?"

"I'm going back!"

"You're not going back."

One of his big arms caught her waist and lifted her off her feet.

"Wiff—stop it! Don't be a fool. I'll get in."

She jumped down into the boat. It rocked crazily. He cast off, leaped in after her with a push that sent the boat out beyond the small flotilla clustered there.

She sat up forward, rebellious, but helpless and silent. Wiff labored desperately with the fly wheel until there was the splutter of the exhaust and they shot out into the dark lake.

"You're kidnapped," he said gruffly. "Sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander."

There was no noise but the outboard's steady putt-putt and the black water slopping against the side.

"What's the idea?" she finally demanded.

"I love you," he said earnestly.

Hurricane's Wooing

By
LOUIS ARTHUR CUNNINGHAM

AT the Sign of the White Sheep, which then was and, for that matter, still is, in Union Street, one could purchase the woolen yarn that the sheep advertised, also goods woven of that yarn, and quaint things the Indians made, like toy bows and arrows, miniature birch bark canoes, snowshoes and gaily beaded moccasins slippers of buckskin; but what, among these diversified articles Hurricane Jack Masters wished to buy would be hard for anyone to imagine. Hands thrust deep into the pockets of his rough seaman's jacket, cap pulled low, he reeled and tacked in front of the sign of the White Sheep for a good five minutes; then squared his shoulders and sauntered in.

There was an old lady in among the goods-weighted tables—an ample body in white apron who looked quizzically at him, bending her head down to stare over her glasses. Hurricane Jack didn't mind her. But that young girl in the blue dress, with the yellow hair peeping out from under her Leghorn hat, with the large dark eyes and pretty face—well, he wished she were in Jericho or himself at the bottom of Davy Jones' locker.

He looked again sheepishly at her to see if she were getting underway, and his eyes met hers fairly and he started as a man will who feels deep in his memory a chord vibrate. He knew her—aye, he knew her. Not to forget her quickly had he gazed on the picture of that girl through many long voyages. But he didn't speak to her; didn't dare to speak. He wished again that she would go. And yet, hadn't he better accost her and—

"Yes, sir?" The old lady had doubtless thus interrogated him several times.

"Oh!" Hurricane Jack turned to her now and gestured towards the table on which lay lay in neat rows, as if waiting for little feet, the moccasins slippers, brown and soft, bright with red, blue and amber beads.

"I want two pairs of those," said Hurricane. "Those moccasins slippers." He knew the dark-eyed girl, in the background, smiled quietly, even if with sympathy, at his awkwardness.

at the deeper red of his sea-beaten rugged face. But he had promised the "Indian slippers" to Captain Miles Thorne's two little girls over in Bristol, and he never forgot promises.

"Yes, sir," said the old woman. "Ladies?" "No!" answered Hurricane, alarmed, feeling the sweat on his brow. "Oh, no! Children's—little girls." Their ages would be about—about five and seven, I think. They're little girls in the Old Country and I was telling them about Indians, and so they wanted something the Indians made."

The slippers were selected with Hurricane's hasty approval, paid for and wrapped. The girl was still there, fingering some yarn, waiting, evidently, to make a purchase. Hurricane Jack tried to bring himself to the pitch of courage requisite to turning and making himself known. Surely she would know of him, remember him.

"Perhaps I could send them for you?" suggested the old woman, eyes beaming through her spectacles.

"Ah, there was his chance. "If—if you would be so kind," he said. "My name is James Masters—captain of the ship Vesper, lying at Pettengill's wharf in the lower cove."

"Yes, sir," repeated the woman jotting it down.

Out of the corner of his sea blue eye, Hurricane Jack saw the girl's quick movement; could feel her eyes grow wider still, almost hear the swift intake of her breath. But he bade the old woman good-day and stroled out of the shop, wondering, unbraiding himself for his stupidity. But then, he was ever an awkward hand with women. Ships had suspect—but no; Dave had stayed away from this city of his birth for several years now, and his activities were confined to the River Plate Country and the gay town of Buenos Aires.

"David was well when you last saw him, Captain Masters?"

"Oh, aye, he was well enough, you might say," lied Hurricane Jack. But he was always lonesome for you. He—he is the kind of Hurricane awakened to the knowledge that they had come to a sort of common where, in the distance, men were playing at cricket. There were benches under shade trees and on one of these they sat; in silence for a few moments, then Nan Forrester said:

"Tell me about Dave, Captain Masters. I had plenty of letters, as you probably know, but they didn't say much. Indeed, he talked mostly of you, of his life on shipboard; then white-fleeced sky, and thought of the wreck that had to be reclaimed. Often and often he had taken on that task of reclaiming Dave Thatcher, he had put Dave straight with his employers and with himself, got him the shore-job with a big coffee company when at length the Montevideo's owners would have no more of his drunken ways. But Dave hadn't done any better ashore. It was all a lie. Dave was in a bad way when Hurricane last left him in file—the straight nose, the firm mouth and out-jutting chin.

Hurricane turned to her and his own eyes that had the color and depth of the sea, looked into hers and there came a wonder that was an agony into his heart. It was a spell, a witching, a madness, a sin in the sight of God, he thought, yet that glory in his heart drove him on; his arms encircled her, and her head rested on his shoulder and his lips kissed hers hotly, hungrily.

With a sound that might have been an oath, he released her, stood up. Strangely the outburst of anger or the cold word of contempt that he waited for did not come. Instead she sat there still, eyes half-closed, gazing at the ground. Then she raised them to his and there was neither anger nor reproach in them.

"I'm—I guess I'm not the man I thought I was, or that you thought or Dave—I'm not such a staunch friend—I'm sorry—"

"I'm not," said Nan Forrester softly.

She got up.

"Come. Let us walk along."

Dazed, wondering, Hurricane walked beside her. They followed the tree-shaded walk across the common, crossed Sydney Street and strolled along the winding path among the tombstones of the old burial ground. Presently, Nan Forrester stopped and they sat on a flat-topped stone. Hurricane Jack twisted his cap in his hands. He was at a loss. He felt utterly wretched and ashamed. A fine one, he, to champion the rights of another. But he'd make up for it. He would set Dave Thatcher on his feet once and for all.

"I guess," he said clumsily, "you won't think much of me after—that, Nan. But I just couldn't help myself. You see, your picture—it was always in Dave's cabin aboard the Montevideo and I used to look at it and maybe from looking at it so long—I-I feel—"

She was listening, yet her eyes were fixed on something—Hurricane Jack followed that direct gaze to the new white plate of a grave-stone—

Sacred to the Memory of David Thatcher
Died in Buenos Aires
May 19, 18—
Born November 7, 18—

He half rose from his seat. His hand brushed his eyes as if he thought it a mirage that he was seeing. But no; the deep-carved letters did not lie.

"Dave—"

He turned to her, to gaze into those deep eyes, to read—

"He was killed," she said quietly, "in a tavern brawl. I heard all about him from the master of the vessel that brought his body here. It didn't matter so much to me. You see—I'd fallen in love with another man long years ago—"

"With another—" Hurricane Jack felt a numbness in his breast.

"Yes," she said, "with the man he told of in his letters—with you."

Across that wine-pooled board sat something that was once a man

Dave Thatcher's Girl

BEHIND him, he heard on the pavement, the patter of light foot-fall. It was she. He knew it was she. He turned. She was almost abreast of him. He raised his cap.

"You're Nan Forrester, aren't you?" he said.

"I—I couldn't be sure. And yet I felt it was you."

"Yes." Her voice was the softest, loveliest, that Hurricane had ever heard. To uphold his reputation as a hard-driving shipmaster and a woman-hater, he had often maintained that all women's voices were sharp and jarring, like rusty block and tackle. But Nan Forrester's was like the sound of the sea lapping lightly on the shore. "Something told me when I saw you outside the Sign of the White Sheep—that I knew you. David always spoke of you in his letters to me. You were his best friend."

"I was and am, Miss Forrester," said Hurricane, falling in step beside her. "Dave would never tell me your port of register—I mean your home city. This is my first voyage to Saint John, and I'm glad I met you. It was sheer chance—sheer lucky chance. I want to talk to you about Dave. You know, of course, he has a shore-job now."

"Yes?" She looked at him queerly; suspiciously, he felt. Did she know? Could she always been his first love—ships and that lovely selfish witch, the sea. Often he had teased Dave Thatcher about the picture of this very girl that hung above Dave's berth when they sailed together in the old Montevideo.

a fellow who needs a woman—he's more human than most of us sailors, I guess. I talked with him in Buenos Aires before we sailed for Bristol—I came here from Bristol, you see—and he talked most of you; said he hoped that you and he—"

Hurricane, confused, confounded, stopped short. He had become gradually aware that her eyes were blue-black—of that color which, at twilight sometimes, the sea was in the coral isles; that her hair was the color of the strand where the sunbeams of noon, striking, burst and scattered in the distant tropics; he had never seen or been near, much less talked with, a creature so slender and lovely and living. Her arm brushed his at times and those glamorous eyes of hers seemed to bring her close, close to him. Dave Thatcher's girl—the girl Dave would marry—the girl Dave must marry.

"He hoped we would be married this Spring," said Nan, helping him. "Was that what he told you?"

"Aye! That was it, miss." Hurricane thanked her with his eyes. Just to talk, to think of her marrying Dave, had made him confused and put him all at sea. Why, David would hold all that beauty in his arms, and touch her lips, her eyes, her hair, with his lips. Dave—Hurricane's brown hands, steel-sinewy hands, clenched hard. He was seeing a smoke-reeking dive, an ante-room of hell, hearing the thrum of mad music and watching the swaying dancers as he sat at a table and across from him—across that wine-pooled board sat something that was once a man. "Won't you sit down a while?"

when he got his shore job with the coffee exporting company, he didn't have much to say about anything. Except—except that we would soon be married."

Hurricane Jack swallowed hard. He loved Dave Thatcher—loved him enough to lie for him to this girlhood sweetheart, this woman, now, whom Dave loved, to whom, even in his hours of dissipation, of defeat, he called. And hope came into Hurricane's heart—sure hope that, for a girl like Nan Forrester, Dave, far gone as he was down the swift, primrose path, could pull himself up. Yes, by all the gods, he'd see that Dave pulled himself up, that Nan would never suffer.

"It takes a young fellow a while to get going," he said staunchly. "Especially a seaman who has taken a berth on land. That's the way with Dave. But he's working hard and making a name for himself down there in Buenos Aires. You don't need to worry about Dave. I think I can tell you safely that, in a few months time, he will come for you and—and you two will be married—"

Shrines of Britain's Glory

By CHARLES CONWAY

Carnarvonshire

PART I

A CONSIDERABLE number of prehistoric remains have been discovered in various parts of Carnarvonshire, which is one of the smaller of the twelve counties of Wales, and its history can be traced back to the early days of the Roman occupation of Britain, when the principality entered upon a lengthy era of bloodshed and strife, which lasted, almost without cessation, for over twelve centuries, the period covered by the successive military operations of Roman, Saxon, Norman and English invaders. The histories of Menai Strait, Carnarvon and Bangor, all of which are situated on the western border of the country, formed the subjects of earlier narratives in this series, and will not, therefore, be referred to in the present story.

The magnificent castle at Conway is the most picturesque fortress in Wales, although it is smaller and less imposing in appearance than the one at Carnarvon, and the perfect circle of medieval walls encircling the town gives the place a most romantic aspect. Conway Castle was erected in the late thirteenth century by Edward I, who was besieged within its walls during the Welsh rising of 1294, where he found himself in imminent danger of being forced to capitulate by starvation; while one hundred and five years later Richard II spent some days in the fortress on his return from Ireland. At the commencement of the Great Civil War Conway Castle was held by John Williams, Archbishop of York, for Charles I, until he was relieved of his command by Sir John Owen, but later, when the pretense discovered that certain property deposited by him in the Castle for safe custody had been seized by the King, he went over to the side of the Parliamentarians and assisted General Mytton to capture the stronghold in 1646.

Founded Monastery

LEWELLYN the Great founded a Cistercian monastery at Conway in 1185, and its site is now partly covered by St. Mary's Church, a most spacious structure, dating back to the thirteenth century. Inside the church is a memorial bust of John Gibson, the sculptor, who was a native of the district; and also the grave of Nicholas Hooker, who died in 1637. The latter was the forty-first child of his father, and was himself the sire of twenty-seven children. One of the most interesting buildings in Conway is "Pias Mawr," a remarkably picturesque example of an Elizabethan house; and outside the town, on Conway Mountain, which rises to a height of 800 feet, are the remains of a triangular British fortress. Nearby, at Deganwy, are the ruins of a Norman castle, which was destroyed by Llewellyn the Great, and which was the last of a series of strongholds on the site. One of them in the sixth century was the favorite seat of Maelgwn Gwynedd, the usurper, whose name is perpetuated in the wooded hill of Bryn Maelgwn, and who died of the pestilence in the neighboring church of Eglwys Rhos in 547.

Pennarmanmawr was the favorite seaside resort of Mr. Gladstone, the great Victorian statesman; while Lewis Carroll, the author of the popular story of "Alice in Wonderland," was frequently a visitor at the mansion which formerly stood on the site of the Gogarth Abbey Hotel at Llandudno, where the hero of Arnold Bennett's novel, "The Card," commenced his successful career. The restored Church of St. Tudno at Llandudno is said to date back to the seventh century, and is a nearby Elizabethan mansion, Gloddeth Hall, the last residence of Archbishop Williams, is a bed on which Queen Elizabeth, Queen Victoria and Queen "Carmen Sylvia" of Rumania are reputed to have slept.

There is a monument to Archbishop Williams in the early sixteenth century church in the village of Llandegai, which was the scene in 1648 of Sir John Owen's defeat by the Parliamentary forces under Col. Thistlethorpe. It is now a model village on the estate of Lord Penrhyn, whose seat, Penrhyn Castle, was erected at a cost of half a million pounds in an attempt to adapt Norman military architecture to modern uses. The castle contains a slate bedstead and the famous "Hiras Horn," the latter being a drinking vessel said to have belonged to the Elizabethan sailor-hero, Piers Griffydd, and celebrated in verse by Mrs. Hemans. The Mwd, in the village of Aber, is beautifully situated at the mouth of a narrow glen, is supposed to mark the site of a castle erected by Llewellyn the Great, where in 1282 the last Llewellyn defied the summons of Edward I to acknowledge his sovereignty.

Church of St. Grwst

THE Church of St. Grwst, at Llanrwst, contains a stone coffin, which is believed to have been used for the burial of Llewellyn the Great at Conway Abbey. When that religious house was destroyed by Henry III, the dispossessed monks removed the prince's remains to their new home at Maenan Abbey, which was one of the largest Welsh monasteries, and endured until the reign of Henry VIII. The village of Betws-y-coed, which nestles among some of the most delightful scenery in Great Britain, was a favorite resort of David Cox, the artist, who is said to have painted the signboard displayed by the local "Royal Oak" Inn. In a disused church in the village is a recumbent effigy of Dafydd Goch, a grandson of Prince Dafydd, who was executed by Edward I in 1283 for his participation with his brother Llewellyn in the final struggle for Welsh independence.

Dolwyddelan, the birthplace of Llewellyn the Great, possesses a couple of quaint relics of the past, a little unrestored church and the remains of a castle. The church was erected by Meredith, Prince of Powis, in the early sixteenth century, and contains a kneeling effigy of its founder, while the castle, which was in the form of a square and isolated tower, is believed to have been built by a Welsh chieftain on an English model, and is "a singular instance of a typical Norman keep astray in the very heart of wildest Wales." Young German Carries on His Famous Family's Peculiar Business

HE can sell you a live tiger for $1,500, or an elephant delivered right to the door for $5,000.

He is Carl Lorenz Hagenbeck, youngest of the wild-animal Hagenbecks, of Hamburg, Germany, recently arrived in New York with a consignment of beasts from his family's famous zoo.

"This dark, slim, twenty-two-year-old youngster belongs to the fourth generation of the family which, since 1865, have been collecting and training and selling wild animals. Their name is known to the world over. They supply almost every famous circus with its menagerie, and when anybody happens to want a full-grown lioness fresh from the jungle, sooner or later the Hagenbeck family is called in.

And it is seldom that they can't fill the order. If they haven't the animal in stock, they'll go out and catch it.

The prize piece of his consignment is a black panther. It is a beautiful beast, and any circus owner would be proud to have it. Because of the need of funds, however, young Hagenbeck will probably let it go for $1,000.

He has some fine tigers which you can take home for $1,000; some kangaroos that anyone should be glad to get for $500, and a few first-class ostriches for the same price.

There are also elephants ranging in price from $5,000 down. The lowest you can get an elephant for is $500, but it is a "damaged" piece, with its tail missing and no teeth.

Most expensive of all is an Indian rhino, priced about $20,000. There are any amount of them in India, but the Government will not allow them to be taken from the country.

A hippo, in comparison, is dirt cheap. Even a full-grown specimen, delivered anywhere with all freight charges paid, only brings $5,000. The Hagenbecks have none of these now, but they'll be glad to get you one.

Unable to sell his lumber otherwise, a sawmill company in Singapore, Straits Settlements, used it to build 176 houses, which now are being offered for sale.

Soliloquies in Victoria's Suburbia

IT was on the twenty-ninth day of October that we first heard, this year, the summons of the wild geese flying south. The unmistakable honk, honk, came to us clearly, pregnant with mystery as ever, and we looked up to see them, the wedge of them elongated but following the one leader, while two or three, like sentinels, flew to the left, perhaps because up from the east the fog was sweeping and they were acting as post posts.

Presently the white mist had blotted out the sunlight and all the far views and the flying birds were quite hidden. But for a long time we could hear them, the rhythmic beat of their wings and their glad, brave song. There is something inexpressibly arousing in the Autumn calling of the great army of birds as they start off on their fine adventure—something that makes one year to get away beyond limitations, to be rid of that law which holds one's feet glued to the ground, when one's whole body and soul would be soaring forth in quest of the unknown.

The Indian name for the wild geese is Scholoplin, as nearly as we can come to the spelling of the word as it was pronounced to us by several Indians of the Reserve on the West Road, the Tsautlip Reserve. The Indians of the West Coast of Vancouver Island, that is, the Ahl tribes, gave the geese the name of Hoxen, according to Gilbert Malcolm Spoor, a name which clearly suggests their soaring cry.

Are Earlier Than Usual

THE Indians tell us that the wild geese are flying south much earlier than usual this year, beginning their migration in October, which is most unusual. Not that the migration is over yet, the time of writing being the eleventh of November, for only yesterday we saw another flock high over Little Saanich. These birds, according to native legend, are certain weather prophets, and their flight so early in the Autumn presages a cold Winter and "snow before Christmas." We hope that this prophecy is wrong. But also, according to local tradition, when there is snow on the Malahat in early November, it means that there will be a white blanket in the valleys in December. "It's never been known to fail," say the old-timers. And the summit of the Malahat was quite hoary two days ago.

At all events, the farmers generally are preparing for a cold Winter, and hastening to get all the Autumn ploughing and seeding done. This is, of course, the season for that sort of thing, and the setting out of young fruit trees and new strawberry plants. Undeterred by the poor results from marketing this year, we are patiently taking up runners and diligently planting them in the newly-cleared, newly-tilled land, hoping against hope for better luck in 1932. Had the rains not been so copious during the last week there would have been a fine second crop of strawberries, but as it is, though they have grown very large, they have not colored, and will be of no use at all.

Cutting Firewood

FARMERS who have any trees for cordwood on their land are felling them and cutting them with mechanical saws into the desired lengths, and then splitting them into stove wood or wood for the fireplaces. Nothing is better for the latter than the great knots. They will last for hours; sometimes one of them will burn all through the day and night, leaving a handful of coals to start another fire in the morning. Of course, time is passing when it will be possible to secure such splendid fuel. These are the remnants of the big-girdle of the trees which used to clothe the hillsides of the peninsula.

There is nothing to equal old growth, or first growth fir, for a fragrant and beautiful fire. There is lots of resin in it, and the bark burns steadily and glowingly and sends out a tremendous amount of heat. But if anyone is fortunate enough to have maple wood to burn, they will probably prefer it to anything else. It is clean and noiseless, its flame very clear and steady. Oak is scarce. One seldom uses it for fuel. But a few years ago when a forest fire swept our slope of land at the back, and killed scores of fine trees, one of our splendid oaks fell before it. It was not burned, however, except round the lowest part of the bole, and since then we have used a bit now and then in the fireplace. It lasts as long as coal. Being as hard as it is ancient, it holds the heat and the flame longer than any other wood, and throws out a most gracious warmth. One can hardly include it in the list of fuels, however.

Protests Were in Vain

EVEN the most hardened and profligate of tree-cutters usually try to spare the oaks. Perhaps they feel an instinctive reluctance to destroy the tree which is one of the symbols of the glory and worth of our country. Though this was certainly not the case on the road which goes through the Indian Reserve, where the magnificent hardwoods were wantonly sacrificed early in the Spring. All sorts of protests were made, and all the protests were unavailing.

What is left of them has been sawed and shaped into cordwood now and piled beside the road, to some of us a sad and barbarous sight—the remnants of these monarchs waiting to be taken away and burned in somebody's furnace or stove. These oaks might have lived on for another hundred years or more to make the highways glad and gay and sweet, not only with their own precious green glooms and the fragrance of their breaking buds, but vibrant and joyful with the melody of singing birds. But there they stand—the sturdy boles of them, the hardy limbs, made into sacrificial piles, and none so poor to do them reverence. Most of this oak wood, we understand, has been sold to packing houses for the purpose of smoking hams and bacon, as hardwood is necessary, and oak is the best of all for the curing of these meats. It is an inglorious end enough, but perhaps this is putting it to a better use than merely burning it for the heat it can give. Certainly it is infinitely better than destroying it in clearing fires at the side of the road, as the road gangs were doing in the first place.

New Lieutenant-Governor Financier and Jurist

WHEN Walter H. Covert was chosen recently as Lieutenant-Governor of Nova Scotia, that province honored witily or otherwise, a native of New Brunswick, for though for many years a resident of Halifax, Mr. Covert was born at Musquash, N.B.

Perhaps the appointment was made in ignorance of the fact. Perhaps it was a gallant gesture of appreciation toward a sister province that has not always been the recipient of such bouquets from Halifax. But far more likely is it that the choice was dictated by the fact that Walter Covert was so eminently the man for the position.

He is the son of an Anglican clergyman. The law early attracted him and he has since become a K.C. and one of the most prominent counsel in the Maritimes. He has been equally successful in the world of business and finance, being president of a light and power company as well as director of other public utilities.

He is sixty-six years old, married, and has three sons and three daughters.

From a Sundial

When as a child I laughed and wept
Time crept.
When as a youth I thought and talked
Time walked.
When I became a full-grown man
Time ran.
When older still I daily grew
Time flew.
Soon shall I find in passing on Time gone.
O Christ! wilt Thou have saved me then?

PEDRO

By
A. D. KEAN

Fairest memory of the old Pedro—the time I roped a bounding ram in the Rockies

The new Pedro is the living image of the Pedro of my youth

NOT once in more than thirty years have I seen the head-type of a horse like that of Pedro, until I brought home to Vallecito a bright bay four-year-old recently. As soon as I saw the colt, memories of my boyhood were awakened—mountain days in British Columbia when a fast-stepping sure-footed saddle horse spelled the acme of desire and swift adventure.

As I looked the young horse over I visioned wild rides with my three younger brothers and relived the scenes of roping a mountain sheep and catching young coyote pups from the back of the old-time Pedro.

We four boys were riding homeward in the Kootenay Valley in 1899 when out from a clump of pines ahead rushed five mountain sheep, led by a magnificent bighorn ram.

"Catch him!" my brother Albert yelled. "Rope 'im with Pedro."

The challenge had scarcely sounded when I shook out my rope, drove spurs into the sides of Pedro and "cut in" on the trail of the speeding sheep.

Less than fifty yards of running brought me up to the ewes and lambs and not more than a jump or two behind the bounding ram. Pedro literally tore up the bunch-grass and pine-needles as he raced up close and I slammed my loop over the head of the bighorn.

At the cast of the rope Pedro set himself squarely upon his haunches and tumbled the leaping ram upon the grass. Albert at once threw another small loop over the animal's hind legs and we "stretched" him out. Then we tied the mountain sheep to a small fir tree, and, later, brought some neighbors to look at him before we turned him loose again.

On another day, in early summer, the four of us rode across a little flat where a mother coyote was playing with her three young pups. They scampered away at sight of us, but we knew the ground and realized that the coyote family was at least half-a-mile from their side-hill burrow. Again I sat astride old Pedro.

At first the young coyotes stuck closely at the heels of their mother, but our horses' hoofbeats soon rattled the cubs and caused them to separate. Pedro swerved and snorted as I leaned in the direction of the nearest pup.

We swiftly closed the gap between us and I made my first grab at the little coyote's bushy tail.

Once, twice, three times, I missed touching him.

Then I caught a fist-full of the puppy's downy fur and tossed him into the air; grabbing a good tail-hold before he fell to the ground. Passing the vicious-snapping pup to my nearest brother. I gave Pedro a breather; while the other boys rounded up the rest of the coyotes.

I loosened Pedro's bridle-reins as the circling group drew near and cut in on the wake of the leading whelp. This chase was short, for Pedro savied the cattle game and was no time in overhauling the quarry.

I picked up the second pup at the first pass and swung him high and clear into the anxious hands of Albert, who rode in close behind me.

Pedro made short work of catching up with the last puppy, which, together with the others, we bound securely in a saddle-blanket and carried home to the ranch.

"That Pedro horse can sure scratch gravel," said Albert, proudly, as we jogged towards the home corral. "He's the champion coyote catcher, you bet."

A Striking Similarity
FOR more than eight years old Pedro was the crack stock horse of my saddle-string, until one sorry day he was stolen.

Again and again he had won steel-roping, calf-roping and other forms of cowboy sports from both my brother Albert and myself.

And as the vivid picture of bygone deeds rose in my memory, I could not help but note the striking similarity of the old Pedro of those Western range days with the beautiful and breezy four-year-old standing in the corral at Vallecito this year of 1931.

Sired by the famous racing thoroughbred "Sobieski," and an equally aristocratic dam, of thoroughbred standard-bred strain, the new horse seemed the reincarnation of that cherished stock-horse of the long ago. The same white stocking marked the left hind foot of the new Pedro. The colt's bulging quarters and shapely forehead, denoted the old Pedro's wonderful ability to carry a rider at a tearing-five-mile-an-hour walk. The same high-arched and powerful loins, together with great depth of heart, well-sloped shoulders, the same high-arched neck and proudly-carried shapely head, conjoined up an interminable train of youthful adventures.

Clean, flat bone, broad-heeled jet black hoofs and the contours and demeanor of good conformation and performance, led me to expect great things of the bright bay four-year-old who gazed intelligently through the cedar railings at my outstretched hand.

"T'm a-goin' to make a sure 'nuff cowhorse out o' you, my sleek-haired boy," I soliloquized, as I reached for the velvety muzzle of the timid colt. "An' even if I have to make a calf out of a bag of sand, an' rope rose-bushes for steers, you're gonna have a chance to be a rope horse—maybe play a little polo or help break a few colts to lead some day soon. This is if I find any unaltered horses in this sophisticated and well organized Ontario. But never mind, little broncho—here goes for your first lesson," and I stepped through the bars of the high corral.

Application of the foot-straps brought strenuous resistance from the young horse. Twice he kicked himself free from the snubbing post, breaking the heavy leg-straps with vicious energy—ropes that had held the Two Star sebras and a number of horses much larger than Pedro. But by patient perseverance I snubbed the nervous colt up close again and went calmly on with my gentling process. First I rubbed the animal's quivering back and sides with a soft bit of gunny sack. Then I sought out all the ticklish spots about the colt—his flank, between his fore-legs, around the small of his neck and behind the sensitive ears.

It wasn't long until I could walk all around the colt, laying my hands at will upon each part of his body, the while he watched with evident curiosity the gentle placing of my hand upon him—or lifted his ears toward the direction of my coming. After about fifteen or twenty minutes I saddled him, and climbed repeatedly on and off at either side, on over his high-arched neck and over his rump to the ground beside his tied hind feet.

Young Pedro Is Range Broke

BY that time young Pedro was fully accustomed to my presence and did not in the least resent my weight upon his back. Then I removed the leg-ropes and made a few quick rounds within the corral. The colt was somewhat bewildered, but at no time did he show the slightest inclination to be mean. Not once did he attempt to "buck," so, after trotting him about for ten minutes, I dismounted in a corner of the yard and removed the saddle and bridle.

That was nearly a month ago. Today young Pedro has become a more than usually proficient saddle horse. He knows all the intricacies of the range-broke stock horse to a surprising degree. He knows the restraint of "hobbles," and picket rope, and will stand with bridle-reins at his front feet for hours, without leaving the spot, even though I have remained away an hour or more at a time.

Again he will rush down upon a pseudo-calf—in the form of bushes, bags of sawdust or branches of trees and set himself gamely as my rope huns taut from the saddle horn. He drags bravely at a low wheeled cart filled with gravel or sand, and hauls away with all the ardor of a cow-pony pulling a half-dead cow from an alkali bog. I've put him at no end of odd jobs of late, and at each he carries on soberly, even wisely, at all times.

Automobiles hold no terrors for him now; neither do flying wads of newspaper or other objects so frightening to most horses. In fact young Pedro is about as far advanced as a saddle horse as the opportunities at hand will allow him to be.

Recently he has taken to the jumping game with right good will, and, if all indications do not mislead me, he may yet make a name for himself amid the best company of his weight and class.

"No, Pedro is not for sale," I told a horseman friend the other day. "I have gentled him for a boy of my acquaintance. A boy just as full of adventure and daring as I ever tried to be. And who knows," I added, "but what the modern Pedro may live to enjoy a series of adventures with every bit as great delight as that honest, fast-footed foothills cowhorse, after whom I named him?"

So here's to you, young Pedro! May your days be filled with dashing chases and tender care.

Former Kaiser of Germany Victor in Many Law Suits

By JACK REMINGTON
(Copyright, 1931, by North American Newspaper Alliance)

WILHELM Hohenzollern, gentleman woodchopper of Doorn and erstwhile Kaiser of Germany, probably experienced mingled sensations of surprise and regret the other day when a German court decided against him in a suit brought by an employee on his former estate near Graditz.

Being sued was more or less a matter of routine with Wilhelm. During his reign in Germany he had to fight more than a score of suits, most of them involving taxation.

Much as the Germans loved their Kaiser, they felt that Wilhelm and other high potentates of Germany should pay their taxes like the average German citizen.

Lawyers, radicals, Socialists and other malcontents were leaders in various movements to force Kaiser Wilhelm, the King of Saxony, and a score of other members of royalty to pay their taxes. The potentates refused, so the courts, the Parliament and the taxation authorities spent many busy months discussing remedies.

The trouble was that while from most kinds of taxes the sovereigns were exempt, they refused payment where they were not exempt. The potentates had no romantic scruples against squabbling over a few pennies. Indeed they were rightly litigious and gladly sacrificed a few dollars in law costs to save a few cents in taxes.

In twenty-four years the former Kaiser fought thirteen law suits in order to free himself from different imposts. He won them all, but every year a new point came up, and the smiling lawyers set to work again.

Saved $240,000 Annually

IN Prussia the ultimate authority was the Berlin higher court of administration, which existed to decide disputes between the state and citizens. This court again and again declared that Prussia's sovereign was free of taxes, imperial, state and municipal. Thereby Wilhelm saved about $240,000 a year.

But owing to the fact that Wilhelm was many things as well as a sovereign, the problem of his taxation liability cropped up forever anew, like the cat in the immortal song. As a rule the claimants were the municipalities. These municipalities, democratic in spirit, were obliged to see that all of the taxes were gathered in, and if they wrongfully let any one off they legally were responsible for the money. Rather than take any risk they fought the Kaiser in court.

After the first half dozen cases had been decided they learned they could not get the Kaiser as "sovereign" or as "citizen of private means," and they then went after him as "tradesman." The local taxation authorities at Graditz awoke to the fact that Wilhelm was breeding horses within their district, and that he sold a large number of thoroughbreds at considerable profit. They assessed him for $1,520 as a horse breeder, but Wilhelm fought the case in the court and beat the assessors.

The radical Berlin municipality thrice attempted to make Wilhelm pay large sums for several months the state treasurer discovered that the picture must be assessed under the law which taxes gifts.

The municipality countered with a declaration that the law exempted gifts made "for moral and charitable purposes," and said the Kaiser's portrait undoubtedly was moral and charitable.

In nearly all of the German Parliaments were parties who wanted to abolish the tax privileges of sovereigns. Even in Schaumburg-Lippe, where the unlucky ruler, Prince Adolf, received no salary and paid $62,500 a year out of his own pocket to run the Government, an ungrateful landtag invited him to pay taxes also.

There has been a sweeping change in taxation methods in Germany since the war, but somehow the higher nobles still manage to air their financial troubles in the courts. The Duke Ernest of Brunswick, a son-in-law of the former Kaiser, has brought suit against the state for $10,000,000, and the claim is now being probed.

The Duke wants a revalorization of compensation funds awarded the King of Hanover in 1867. The funds were invested in Prussian consols, the value of which was wiped out by the German inflation.

The municipality proposed to impose an amusement tax, such as many Prussian towns had at the time. It included a heavy tax on theatre tickets. The promoters of the tax insisted that Wilhelm's theatres should pay, but the royal theatres went untaxed.

The Berliners next tried to make the Kaiser pay as storekeeper. His Majesty had a magnificent store in the Leipzigerstrasse, where he sold porcelain made at his factory at Wegelystrasse, Charlottenberg. The authorities assessed Wilhelm $1,050 on this store. The ministry of the court, which represented the Kaiser, refused to pay on the ground that His Majesty used the store as a sovereign, and not as a tradesman.

How Table Was Turned

THE state later turned the table on the Berlin municipality by trying to make it pay taxation on a gift to the Kaiser. Wilhelm gave the city hall a fine portrait of himself. After the portrait had hung peacefully

Thomas Bata, the peasant who regulates

Former Kaiser Wilhelm II

Shoe King Rules the Lives of 17,000 Employees

THOMAS Bata, shoe king of Europe, rules the lives of 17,000 factory workers with a grip of steel.

As great an industrialist as Henry Ford, this son of a peasant shoemaker has created a small republic in a remote corner of Czechoslovakia. Here he has built up the world's greatest shoe factory, and around it a community for his workers.

His average factory hand works a forty-five hour week and gets $4 for it. But he has other compensations. He lives in a dormitory home provided by Bata, eats all his meals in a Bata restaurant, buys all his goods in a Bata store, dances in a Bata dance hall, and each week hands his savings into a Bata bank. Saturday is pay day, and by the following Wednesday, it is calculated, sixty-five per cent of the workers' wages have returned to the shoemaker ruler through his houses, stores and amusement places.

Every movement in a worker's day is regulated by this footwear czar. Everyone must be up by 5:30 sharp. Everyone must have physical exercises. Everyone must be at the factory at seven o'clock. In the evenings their spare time must be spent in ways dictated by Bata. At nine o'clock they must be in bed.

Thomas Bata, the peasant who regulates these lives, is fifty-five years old. He is worth $50,000,000. He has accomplished most of this in the last ten years. A genius for organization has erected this system until almost every flaw has been eliminated, and, what is equally extraordinary, his system is approved by the workers. They are satisfied with it, and each day turn out 135,000 pairs of shoes.

These shoes flood into almost every country in Europe. They are the cheapest shoes in the world, and for the price they are good. More than half of the women's inexpensive footwear sold in Great Britain are Bata made, and the number will be swollen soon by a new contract under which he will supply an English house with 2,000,000 pairs a year.

About Bata as an individual there is little known. He has, with peasant tenacity, cloaked his life and interests outside his little commercial kingdom. In appearance he is stoutly built, energetic, and sparkles with enthusiasm. It is a fact that he started life in his father's village shoeshop and later peddled boots and shoes from door to door. Then, after twenty-five years of silence, his name began appearing on shoes in many European countries. Today, mention of it brings uneasiness in shoe manufacturing circles. It stands for a mysterious little peasant whose actions, quick and devastating, can obliterate a country's footwear industry.

Bata's movements outside his factory world are as mysterious as his personality. It is known he travels only in his own aeroplanes with his personal pilots. His time is too valuable for train or boat.

A story that has sprung up about him says he spends long hours in his office sitting in front of a huge revolving globe. On it Bata marks what he thinks the sale of his shoes should be in any particular area. What he marks in in figures must be reached by his immense sales forces, or he must know the reason why.

In another corner of his office is a board of signal lights. These flash on whenever he is wanted in one of the factory buildings, and when a light calls he goes, and the technical skill of this shoemaker emperor is so comprehensive he can put any intricate machine to rights, or show a worker what should be done.

The secret of his immense success probably lies in the cheap labor he can draw upon. There is an infinite supply of it in the surrounding countryside, and Bata collects it, trains it and uses it.

Few Canadians would endure his system of mass production and wages, but the simple Czechoslovakian villagers flock to his factories.

In return, they live in hygienic surroundings. The factory buildings, forty of them, stand in ruled lines behind grass plots. Around them in regular order are grouped the homes, clubs and stores of the workers.

The finest building in the place is a club for the workers.

Shadows of India

By CAPT. T. KERR RITCHIE

THE first evening I reported for duty to a certain regiment in the Northwest of India, the Commanding Officer, consuming several hours peering at me modestly quaffed as many bottles of soda water, lectured me solemnly on the proper official methods of dealing with native servants, and endeavored to enlighten me on the subject of Indian robbers, chowkidars, bhaitas and khansamahs.

I left the messroom around midnight to cross over to my little thatched bungalow, about twenty yards away, brains buzzing with yarns of dacoits, thugs and police court or court martial affairs generally. Nearing the bungalow, I came round the corner of a thick clump of bush and almost walked plump into the arms of a tall native in a loin cloth, sedately pacing round the building with the aid of a long stick a foot higher than himself. Naturally, I lit out with my left, and was hammering him on the ground, when I suddenly realized, through his broken-winded protestations, that he was the "chowkidar," the thief whom one pays to guard one's bungalow and belongings because he knows the other thieves, and, by mutual arrangement, keeps them occupied elsewhere!

Possibly the shock to the chowkidar's nerves had something to do with the disappearance of a pair of German field glasses which I was showing to a brother officer several days afterwards. I remember packing them carefully that evening in the bottom of a tin uniform case which I locked securely, and the key of which I kept with my identity disc on a lanyard round my neck. The case fitted exactly under the narrow charpoy bed, and the slightest movement would have disturbed my rest, as one does not sleep on a mattress in Indian hot weather, only a sheet spread over the slight wooden framework of the charpoy.

At four o'clock next morning, when I went to my box for something, every article seemed in its right place, but the field glasses had vanished. As a result of this, I got a new chowkidar, who was the proud possessor of a chit, or note of recommendation from a local district magistrate, conceived in these terms:

"I certify that what Lal Ram does not know about the gentle science of beguiling boots, collar studs, or rupees from their rightful owner's socks, shirts or shorts is not worth knowing."

However, I never missed a pin while Lal Ram guarded the bungalow, and I was secretly amused when I found one day that the Commanding Officer's new punkah wallah was my old chowkidar. But by this time I was beginning to know something of Indian ways.

The Scheme That Failed

AN Indian hotel or caravanserai, anywhere outside the main centres of civilization, is rarely in one building. There is invariably a main central dining or reception bungalow, and a collection of small sleeping or rest bungalows in the compound. At one place the manager told me thieves were rather active in the neighborhood. There was the usual charpoy bed and little else in my bungalow, but I was favored by having a portable electric fan with about twenty yards of unnecessary wire when one attached it to the light bracket, and though I had only a few silver rupees with a handkerchief in my tunic pocket, I determined they should be there in the morning!

Accordingly, I wound the tunic securely in the wire, placing it under the bed. Next I placed the fan, going full blast, on the extreme edge of a packing case at the side of the bed. As a matter of fact, I slept lightly and fitfully under the mosquito net, because of the humming of the fan, but at three o'clock in the morning, when I rose and pulled my tunic out from under the bed, everything was as it had been, even the tunic pockets properly buttoned in the regulation manner; but the rupees had disappeared!

Are Marvelous Thieves

IN Canada we have much to learn from the Indian outlook on life, but it will be a long time before Mahatma Gandhi's costume becomes popular in our temperate climate, and a spare, naked, dark body, well greased, or rather oiled, can do wonders in abstracting other people's belongings from impossible places.

Of course, in India the animals are great teachers, and, since they are worshipped by the majority to the complete exclusion of exchange, war, debt, commercial depression, and other benefits of civilization, perhaps their influence is rather detrimental than otherwise.

Once upon a time I saw a Tommy coming over from the canteen to his bungalow. Hugged to his breast in one arm he held a well-filled paper bag of buns, in the other hand he carried a bottle of beer. Wearing a pith helmet, his visual range for air attack was limited. A nice glossy black crow smelt those buns, because suddenly I observed him swoop out of the blue and fly off elusively with an over-large bun in his neb. All the volumes of Kipling would not suffice to understand the ensuing flow of language from the parched, famished lips of the rookie who had been robbed, as he alternately shook his fist at the swooping bird and stared dully at the sun-baked earth watered with the contents of the bottle which he had dropped in his surprise.

And It Was Not

During the history lesson Cyril was asked when Rome was built.

"At night," he replied. "And who told you that?" queried the teacher. "You, sir; you said Rome wasn't built in a day."

THE lover of animals gives his dumb friends the tenderest of care; the lover of plants displays no less affection in the attention he gives the other branch of the major divisions of the living world. The lover of animals is prompted to administer tender care by his desire to insure his friends against pain and discomfort. Probably the plant lover instinctively accords his friends the same treatment for the same reason. Perhaps the plant lover realizes that his friends do not reveal their pain and discomfort as readily as the animal but senses that they have "feelings" in some degree at least.

That such is within the realms of possibility is borne out by recent experiments carried out by Prof. Wilder D. Bancroft, of Cornell University, and reported to the National Academy of Sciences. This experimenter has discovered that plants can be anesthetized, and are rendered insensitive by various drugs, reacting to these drugs in much the same way as animals.

Professor Bancroft worked with the well-known "sensitive plant," Mimosa pudica, kept as a curiosity in many conservatories. This plant has an almost animal-like sensitivity to touch, its leaves folding up at the stimulation as if it were possessed of a nervous system. Sprinkling a sodium thioeyanate solution over the roots, the plant quickly became relatively insensitive. Even powerful blows failed to bring out the folding response of the leaves which before was evoked by the slightest touch. Sensitivity began to return in an hour.

The plant was subjected to numerous other tests with other drugs. In every case reactions proved that it was drugged into insensibility in the same way that an animal would be affected by anesthetics.

Vancouver Winter Fair

ENTRIES for the Vancouver Winter Fair close tomorrow, and the event will be held from November 30 to December 3. Cecil Tice, Provincial Field Crops Commissioner, points out that the eleventh hour has arrived for intending exhibitors and they must get their entries away at once. Some new classes have been arranged in the seed and potato sections. These include classes for registered seed grain, classes for new exhibitors and a commercial potato marketing class.

In addition the usual World's Grain Exhibition classes have been provided. As the World's Grain Exhibition, due to economic conditions, has been postponed until 1933, intending exhibitors at the exposition which is to be held at Regina will have another year in which to increase their knowledge of preparing and exhibiting their entries. Many good pointers should be picked up at the Vancouver Winter Fair.

Ninth Island Contest

WITH thirty-four pens entered, the ninth annual Vancouver Island Egg-Laying Contest is now under way at the Dominion Experimental Station, at Sidney. Twenty-four pens are entered by Vancouver Island breeders. Gulf Island breeders have contributed five, and five are from the Mainland, all within the Province. As usual, Single Comb White Leghorns lead in number of entries, this year with fifteen. There are seven pens of White Wyandottes, six of Rhode Island Reds, four of Barred Plymouth Rocks, one of Buff Rocks and one of Light Sussex.

The contest is conducted under ordinary rules of commercial egg production. Records comparable with the best anywhere are established by the entries each year. The system there may be taken as a guide for any commercial poultry ranch, and it will be well worth any poultry keeper's time to investigate the methods of feeding, care and management. While his conditions may not warrant following the system employed at the contest in every detail, it will gain much valuable information to aid in making his own plant more successful. The superintendent of the farm is always glad to see that visitors are given as much information as possible and he welcomes correspondence with anyone interested in the work of the station.

New Dusting Powder

THE Canadian Co-operative Wool Growers have announced they now have available for distribution a dusting powder that is effective in combating ticks where regular dipping facilities are not available or practicable. This powder can be used regardless of weather conditions, and it is simply dusted over the animal's back. It is equally efficient with other kinds of livestock and poultry as well. They state:

"While fully effective and therefore to be recommended for regular Fall and Spring work, the new insecticide has a special place as well. At a cost of a few cents per head it is absolutely effective on lice, mites and ticks on all livestock when used during the Winter months. It is quickly and easily applied without injury or burning to the skin."

"It does not, of course, take the place of the regular annual dipping, but where dipping has not been possible this insecticide will give equally good results."

Field Crop Acreage

AN increase of twenty-one per cent in the acreage to field crops in British Columbia in the past ten years is revealed in a preliminary statement issued by the Dominion Statistician as result of compilation of figures taken in the census this year and compared with the figures obtained in 1921. From the acreage standpoint, cultivated hay, as differentiated from wild hay, constitutes the largest single crop, the area being 184,789 acres, or 21,221 acres more than in 1921.

The acreage in oats, being 85,647, shows an increase of 14,929 in the past ten years. The largest increase is in the area sown to wheat, there being 64,827 acres compared with 40,627 ten years ago. Potato acreage has shown little change the area being 20,365 in 1921 and only 160 less in 1931. Barley has increased from 5,766 to 9,831 acres, while rye has dropped from 4,648 to 3,971. Mixed grains have increased by 849 acres to 2,389 and flax from eighty-two acres to 275.

The total acreage in the principal field crops in 1931 is given as 371,774 compared with 307,154, an increase of 64,620.

Two Master Farmers

MASTER Farmer gold medals and certificates have been awarded by the Northwest Farmer and Home to two British Columbia farmers, the first to receive such recognition in this Province. Sixteen master farmers have been chosen in all in Western Canada. The purpose of the movement is to honor farmers who have made an outstanding success as farmers, as home builders and citizens. Candidates are nominated by friends or neighbors, and in this Province final selection was made by a committee consisting of Dean F. M. Clement, of the University of British Columbia; J. B. Munro, Deputy Minister of Agriculture for the Province; and Lyman T. Chapman, editor of the agricultural journal sponsoring the movement.

Those to receive the awards this year are L. P. Solly, Westholme, and John Mole, Ladner. Mr. Solly is a native son of Victoria. After serving for two years in a bank, he started to farm on his present place, and in twenty-two years, through specializing in poultry breeding, potato growing and dairying, he has become widely known as a successful farmer. While his farm comprises 150 acres, only thirty-five acres are under the plow, yet so intensive are his operations ten men are employed the year around. With all his specialized farm interests, Mr. Solly finds time to take an active interest in church and community affairs.

Mr. Mole is a dairy farmer who has succeeded in building up a model farm from a holding that was in an extremely rundown condition after being in the hands of tenants for fourteen years before he purchased the place. Mr. Mole, like Mr. Solly, takes an active part in community affairs.

Honey Market Depends on Meeting Demand of the Consumer

A FEW years ago the demand for honey in Canada was considerably greater than the supply, and because of this fact there was little or no difficulty in disposing of this product at fancy prices. The combination of scarcity and good prices not only acted as an inducement to those who were already beekeepers to increase their activities, but also encouraged many, who otherwise were not interested, to enter the ranks of the honey producers, so that now the supply is in excess of the demand on the home markets.

During the period of easy selling, the producer had things very much his own way; it was not necessary for him to sort his honey into color classes or to be so very particular regarding its quality or the type of container that he used, for honey sold quite readily without too much fussing about with it.

Today, however, there is much keener competition in marketing, and the consuming public have become much more discriminating in their purchasing, so much so that the producer can no longer dictate the terms at which he will sell, but the consumer is now dictating the terms at which he will buy.

Unfortunately, during the easy selling periods, habits were contracted that appear to be very hard to break, but which must be broken to successfully meet the new conditions. Honey was packed in almost anything that would hold it, little or no attempt was made to grade it according to color or quality, and it was practically all put out under one common label of "Pure Honey."

The consumer had no means of knowing the quality of what he was buying other than an examination of the contents of the container, nor had he any safeguard that the second purchase would equal the first. That these habits are hard to break is seen in the fact that under the present selling conditions they are continued to a considerable extent, for in 1929, out of 111,880 pounds of honey inspected, it was found necessary to regrade 29 per cent and to reject 13 per cent of it; and of 252,066 pounds inspected during 1930, 18.8 per cent had to be regraded, and of 442,866 pounds 25,380 pounds had to be rejected.

In present-day selling the consumer's wants must be considered, and the producer who fails to recognize this fact cannot hope to successfully market his product.

Grading Helps Exports

DEPENDABLE quality is an advantage in the export market. During the past year, from October, 1930, to October, this year, exports of eggs from Halifax to Bermuda have held steady despite the advantage of lower price enjoyed by competing export product. This is a fine indication of the value of standardized grading for eggs and also of the benefit of Government inspection of export eggs. Canadian exporters have secured the confidence of the Bermuda market in the quality of their product and the reliability of our grades. The same is true with respect to the export of eggs to Newfoundland, where quality is winning confidence with the result that important new markets for Canadian eggs are developing.

Factors Affecting Egg Production During Winter Months

By PROF. E. A. LLOYD
University of British Columbia

THE price of eggs now permits poultrymen who secure satisfactory production to make a reasonable profit. But egg production may be unfavorably affected by poor housing and bad judgment in feeding management.

As the damp, cold weather approaches, it will be necessary to provide the birds with comfortable quarters. If poultry houses are too open and the birds exposed to fog and cold winds, egg production is bound to suffer. If a cold snap occurs there may be a serious and lasting slump in production at the critical period of higher egg prices.

When the temperature goes below forty-five degrees in a poultry house, it has been found that Leghorns, more particularly, drop in production. The heavy weight breeds, like the Rocks, Reds and Wyandottes, are somewhat more resistant to cold. To secure the necessary warmth and ventilation it may be necessary to close up the front of the poultry house entirely, except for purposes of ventilation.

Corn in the Ration

WHILE our Western Canadian grains have been used to a large extent during the past years as a substitute for the imported corn, the decreasing spread between wheat and corn may warrant the more liberal use of corn, both in the scratch and the laying mash. Corn has an advantage in its vitamin content and its conditioning qualities. If poultrymen, however, secure good results by the use of wheat, oats and barley, it may not be necessary to change.

The feeding of a wet mash once a day, preferably with skim milk, if it is available at a reasonable price, will help to condition the birds, and increase the consumption of animal protein. This in turn will result in higher production and possibly larger eggs.

Feed Must Be Clean

IT is also necessary to feed nothing but fresh, clean and wholesome laying mash in hoppers that are kept absolutely clean. Dust, mould and insects in laying mash may spell disaster. Scratch grain should either be fed on a clean floor in fresh, dry litter or in troughs. Leghorns will consume approximately equal parts of scratch grain and laying mash. It may be necessary to cut down on the amount of scratch grain fed to breeds like the Barred Rocks and Light Sussex to encourage greater mash consumption and higher production.

Birds kept in confinement in Winter should receive one per cent of sardine or cod liver oil and fresh green feed or three to five per cent alfalfa leaves and blossoms in their mash. Breeders may be fed up to ten per cent or more of the green alfalfa.

Quality Brings Premium

ANY farmer in the least degree skeptical of the real value of quality in his produce attracting real interest on the part of the consumer needs only to visit a city like Montreal, stroll along St. Catherine Street, particularly in the dusk of early evening, and watch the eager crowds admire striking window displays of poultry, meat, butter, eggs, fruits, vegetables and canned goods, all graded and displayed to show excellence of quality as marked by Government grades. This is the season when poultry holds the centre of attraction, and no farmer or poultryman could fail to get enthusiastic were he to see the evident quality and finish of "A" grade poultry (and the price tag on them) or to see the number of really fine birds which pass over the counter in the better stores of the busy shopping districts. Quality not only brings a premium but also develops demand. Feed your stock to a finish and cash in on quality.—Federal Department of Agriculture.

Research Workers Seek to Extend Wheat Belt Westward

TO extend the Canadian wheat belt to the Pacific Coast has been for the past six years the objective of the faculty of agriculture at the University of British Columbia. The results so far have been highly encouraging, according to Dr. G. G. Moe, a member of the faculty.

At the experimental grounds in the university area wheat seed from the principal agrarian countries of the world has been sown. There is wheat there from China, Scandinavia, England, the Argentine, Australia and the United States. More than forty varieties are being tested. One of the varieties is Reward, which Dr. Moe years ago assisted in perfecting under the direction of Dr. C. E. Saunders, of the Dominion Experimental Farm. Just as perfection of Reward wheat has rolled the wheat belt further North, so the university hopes to find a wheat which, planted in British Columbia soil, will make it unnecessary in the future to import soft wheat into this Province for milling purposes.

"We are seeking the wheat which will have the greatest dollars and cents value to the British Columbia farmer," said Dr. Moe, "and a soft wheat for which there is at present a large demand in China."

Affected by Climate

HOW wheats from other lands respond to being adopted here was shown by Dr. Moe. He tried varieties which flourish in the Pothouse country in Eastern Washington. Wheat of low protein content which does well in the Judith Basin, Montana, in the Columbia Valley and in the Pothouse area immediately increases its protein content when taken into British Columbia, it was shown. In fact, wheat from Washington and Oregon changed entirely when taken North.

Wheat which flourished in Sweden had been tried out. But Swedish wheat, unlike the sturdy sons and daughters of Sweden, who do well in British Columbia, is too delicate for this climate. It does not have the hardiness and therefore has been counted out by Dr. Moe. It is not yet possible for the experts to decide what particular wheat will serve the purpose here. Tests must go on for another year or more. But meantime, the results show that perhaps seeds from Ontario, Indiana or Kansas may be the ones which will make good here west of the Rocky Mountains.

Ottawa Breeder Winner of Laying Contest

FOR the first time in the history of the Canadian egg laying contests held annually at the Central Experimental Farm, Ottawa, a local district breeder has won major honors for pens. It is also only the second occasion on which Barred Plymouth Rocks have finished ahead of White Leghorns. J. A. Dawson's Pen No. 2, Barred Plymouth Rocks, headed pens in the Twelfth Canadian Egg Laying Contest with a total point score of 1932.2, 2,133 eggs. This was a lead of barely 2.8 points over another pen of Barred Rocks owned by the Northern Specialty Farm, St. Williams, Ont., scoring 1900.4 points for 2,053 eggs. Third place was to C. D. Calder, Cowanville, P.Q., for a pen of White Leghorns scoring 1943.1 points for 1,873 eggs.

Barred Plymouth Rocks also headed the contest for individual performance, first place going to Pratts Experimental Station, Norton, Penn., U.S.A., on bird 290, Barred Rock, scoring 279 points for 258 eggs. Bird 99, also a Barred Rock, took second place with a score of 276 points for 280 eggs. The Ontario Agricultural College entry bird 41 took third place with a score of 264.4 points for 253 eggs.

Mrs. C. Sowerby, of Woodberry Grove, England, who is 101, has had thirteen children, six of whom, including four over seventy, are still living.

The Garden Week by Week

By NORMAN W. F. RANT, F.R.H.S.

THERE are many gardens in which can be found a hot, dry, sunny bank; and no doubt the owner has been put to some trouble to clothe it in a suitable manner. Imagine a slope facing due south, fairly steep, and composed of light, sandy soil. Obviously this will not accommodate the general run of plants, and a selection must be made comprising those that will endure great heat, and possibly, drought.

The following plants will soon make a good growth and another bank. For the Spring show plant Aubrietias in their many colors. Some of the best are Dr. Mules, purple-mauve; Crimson King, deep red; Lisdale Pink and Mauve Queen.

For later blooming, plant the helianthemums, or sun roses. These may be had in many colors, pink, red, yellow, orange and so on. They will bloom until late in the Fall. In fact, they are still in bloom today in the writer's garden.

The lemon-colored Alyssum (Alyssum Citrinum) is a beautiful plant and will produce seas of lemon-colored flowers in May and June.

Antirrhinum Asarina is a trailing snapdragon which likes a hot, dry place. It has yellow flowers and continues to bloom all Summer long.

The Siberian Wallflower, Cheiranthus Allionii, is an orange-colored subject that is always in bloom.

Any of the dwarf Hypericums (St. John's Wort) are splendid subjects for such a situation and will produce their golden suns for many weeks on end.

Besides the above, one may plant Iberis, Saponaria, Tunica Saxifraga, Thymes, Sedums and Evening primroses.

Useful Annuals

IF annuals are wanted, one may use Phacelia campanulata, Phlox, Drummondii, Lep-tosiphon and Nasturtium.

A perennial plant, common enough but still not seen as much as it deserves, is the Gallardia, or Blanket Flower, a very showy subject and very free flowering. The color is red and yellow, but almost every plant is different; that is, the degree of red in the flower varies. It should be planted in the sunniest position possible and the soil should not be too rich. It will bloom from June until frost. Plant about eighteen inches apart and in as large a mass as possible.

Now that it is the season for planting rose trees, perhaps the following hint may be of use. A point that is very often overlooked is that the roots of the plant should rest on a firm surface which, after being well dug and stirred, should be trodden thoroughly. Many people tread the surface when the tree is planted, but forget that the loose earth covering the roots, having no firm foundation, cannot be pressed closely to them, as it should be. In addition, do not plant in frosty weather, do not let any manure—even if it is rotten—come in contact with the roots and, lastly, be sure the hole is large enough for the roots to be well spread out, and your careful planting will assure success.

Pruning Ramblers

GREAT mistakes are often made when pruning rambler roses, by leaving too many old branches in the bush. Young ramblers, when planted the first season, should have all the weakest growths cut out close to the ground, and the next season several fine, strong growths will appear; this will enable the grower to cut out old branches left from its first season's growth. By the fourth year it will be possible to cut out all old wood and tie in nothing but new wood. Pruning in this way one has always a good healthy rambler and large trusses of bloom.

The Greek Windflower (Anemone Blanda) is one of the earliest of the family to come into bloom, often before Winter is over.

It grows about six inches high and has flowers two inches across, and the type is a beautiful blue, but it varies through pinks and rose to pure white. Although this species looks very much like Anemone Appennina, it is quite distinct from that plant.

It should be planted on a warm, sheltered border, the soil of which should be light, rich loam. Warm raised positions in the rock garden will be found suitable. Strangely enough, it is not a good plant for naturalizing in grass for in such a position it simply exists and never increases. In a suitable position it will seed itself and increase in that way.

Fish Meals and Their Nutritive Value in Livestock Feeding

By DR. FRANK T. SHUTT

THE use of fish meals in the rations of all classes of stock and especially in those for pigs and poultry is steadily increasing. These meals may, perhaps, be regarded, primarily, as sources of protein, but the fat, the mineral content and iodine are also constituents of very considerable value in stock feeding.

Fish meals should be considered both from the standpoint of composition and of source. It is very important that edible fish meals be made from fresh fish; meals made from spoiled fish containing rancid oil may cause serious digestive disturbances. The percentages of oil and moisture are factors for consideration, as the amounts of these constituents present markedly affect the keeping quality of the meal. Both should be as low as possible. In recent years there has been considerable improvement in this respect and the greater number of these products now on the market are low enough in water and fat to insure their storage for a reasonable time in good condition. Ten per cent of each of these constituents may be considered a safe limit.

Protein Content

VARIOUS parts of the fish used in the manufacture of fish meals contain protein. The most valuable is the flesh. The proteins of flesh have high coefficients of digestibility and are by far the most valuable source of nitrogen in stock feeding. Heads, fins, tails, bones and scales are also used in the manufacture of fish meals in varying proportions. Such meals while rich in proteins, may not yield much of this nutrient to the animal, due to the comparatively low digestibility of such forms as chitin and allied proteins which enter largely into the composition of fins, tails, etc. In consequence, the fish meals of greatest nutritive value, are those containing the largest proportion of flesh—viz., those from whole fish rather than those from fish offal.

The mineral content of these feeds, is the second factor in importance to the stock feeder. The bone phosphate content is not generally so high as in "meat and bone" meal or "meat and bone fankage," the meat product comparable to the fish meals, although there are exceptions. The average bone phosphate in a series of meat and bone products analyzed at the laboratories of the Central Experimental Farm, Ottawa, was approximately twelve per cent and the average from a series of fish meals 6.5 per cent. These fish meals were all manufactured at the Pacific Coast, and were made chiefly from salmon, halibut and dogfish.

Analysis Is Valuable

LATER series made from the Atlantic Coast contained much higher percentages of mineral matter. They were made, chiefly from herring, haddock and cod. Meals made entirely from dogfish are very low in bone phosphate. Generally speaking, a low percentage of fat will mean a high protein and mineral content. The guaranteed analysis of a fish meal is worthy of scrutiny in selecting a brand of this class of food.

These products are sold under guarantee and experience in these laboratories has led to the conclusion that the guarantees are a reliable guide to the content found on analysis. Low moisture and fat, well-balanced proteins and fat, assurance of fresh fish are the factors to be given attention in considering a guarantee for fish meals.

Mulching of Perennial Flowers and Small Fruits for Winter

ALTHOUGH the commonly grown varieties of flowering perennials and small fruits are not, as a rule, harmed by freezing, while in the dormant stage, most of them may be readily killed by alternate freezing and thawing. Accordingly, in order to secure the best results from such plants, a covering must be provided which will act somewhat as an insulator and prevent thawing of the soil and plant roots in unseasonably warm weather during Winter and early Spring.

Nature's protection, or mulch, is ideal, although unsightly. The stems of herbaceous plants, after dying, remain upright and catch wind-borne leaves and later snow. As the season advances these stems break down and form a protection for the crown of the plant in early Spring. Shrubbery holds leaves and litter that are blown into it, and as a result, wherever necessary, material collects to form an efficient mulch.

Straw Best Mulch

GENERALLY speaking, the best material for a mulch is coarse straw or very heavy horse manure. Close-lying or dense material, such as well rotted manure, is not satisfactory, as heating may often start and kill the plants. The mulch should be applied in the Fall and removed or dug into the soil when danger of severe cold is past the following Spring.

Practically all of our common perennial flowers are benefited by a mulch two to four inches in depth of straw, leaf mould or heavy horse manure.

Strawberries are best mulched with coarse straw, which should be spread evenly over the rows to a depth of two or three inches. Many of the harder varieties will winter satisfactorily without a mulch, but, under such a condition the plants will usually begin to grow early in the Spring and commence to bloom before the danger of severe late Spring frosts are past. This may kill the blossoms and lessen the crop of berries.

Care of Strawberries

IT is also possible to extend the cropping season of strawberries by keeping a portion of the area in crop, mulched until the plants actually begin growth under the mulch. By this procedure the plants are kept dormant until comparatively late in the season, and will bear a crop somewhat later than plants which have been allowed to start growth at a more normal time, by the earlier removal of mulch.

Currants, gooseberries and hardy raspberries are benefited by mulching around the roots with ordinary barnyard manure, which can be worked into the ground by cultivation during the late Spring.

As a rule, many plants will survive and even appear to thrive, without mulching, but experience has shown that mulching, if properly done, will benefit practically any variety or species of small fruits and perennial flowers.

Mr. Pemberton's Bazaar

THE door of Mr. Pemberton's ground floor flat shut with a sharp bang as he turned his footsteps westward.

Why he was starting out on this particular quest he did not quite know. He had been over-persuaded again, and had weakly given in. He had never meant, for the rest of his life, to go to another bazaar.

The last one had been ridiculous. There had been more helpers than buyers, and each helper, with rising hopes at Mr. Pemberton's approach, had pestered him to buy. He had come away with a cushion he hated, with panicles worked on it and the words "For Thoughts," simply because the stallholder had smiled sweetly at him. He had also purchased an expensive bundle of pencils with a tassel on each. Why were old bachelors such easy prey?

For today's bazaar Mr. Pemberton had bought an entrance ticket from a little boy who had come to his door; and he had promised the little boy that he would really use the ticket, just because the boy had said, "It's for an animal's hospital, and I'll look out for you there. I'm glad you're coming, sir; and there will be guessing games and things." Mr. Pemberton never could bear to disappoint people.

When Mr. Pemberton reached the large hall in which the bazaar was being held, he thought it was a better bazaar than most. For one thing, a band was playing and there seemed to be real business going on.

Yes, it was a better bazaar than he remembered for quite a long time, though, in spite of this, he often eyed the door and looked at his wrist watch. However, he did his duty, behaving like a perfect bazaar customer.

He bought mats he could never use, and he dipped in a tub for little packages out of which bran dripped, all of which he thrust into a big parcel without opening them. He guessed the weight of a cake, a doll as big as a baby, and a pot of flowers, paying almost a guess, and then he looked at his watch again.

Bowed down with parcels he began to escape through the main exit. But as he went, the little boy who had sold him the ticket caught sight of his hurriedly departing figure, and seized upon it.

"You can't possibly go until the names for guessing are called!" he exclaimed. "Listen! They're starting now."

Mr. Pemberton could see the little boy giggling for joy at his remarks. Then he called out some names.

"Mrs. Turner wins the cricket bat."

There was loud laughter as a large, important-looking lady went forward to claim it.

A little baby, whose meals consisted of milk from a bottle, won the cake, and "Mr. Pemberton wins the doll," the funny man shouted. Laughter again, and the little boy clapped his hands.

"Really!" Mr. Pemberton said, as he clutched the doll in his arms, hardly knowing how to hold it. "It is absurd. Me, a doll indeed. Aburd."

But no one took any notice of these remarks. The doll was popped into a long box and Mr. Pemberton carried it home.

Back in his smoking-room Mr. Pemberton opened his "dips" and took his doll out of her box.

He discovered engines, whistles, ninepins, all fine. But the doll! Her cheeks were apples, her eyes sapphires. Her dress was a dream of frills. Mr. Pemberton sat her against a pot of tulips, and everywhere he went about the room she smiled at him.

But Mr. Pemberton was puzzled. He could not keep engines and whistles and a doll in his room like this. If anyone were to peep in now they would think he was becoming queer in his head. He could not very well go and leave them in the Park, he might be arrested as a lunatic; and he had no nieces or nephews of the age to play with such toys.

For a day or two Mr. Pemberton puzzled, and then he had an inspiration. He wrote some words on a piece of cardboard and hung it by a piece of string round the neck of the lovely doll. Then he sat her in his window, staring out into the street. The words on the cardboard were:

"To be given away. Enquire within."

Then, feeling like a naughty boy about to play a trick, Mr. Pemberton waited behind the curtains.

Presently he saw a group of children coming down the road, and as they reached Mr. Pemberton's house they stopped and read the notice. To his astonishment they seemed to think the whole thing a joke, and bursting into laughter they passed on down the street.

This happened more than once, till Mr. Pemberton was in despair.

It was just about then that little Peggy Lancaster passed along. Now Peggy was poor and she had no toys, but she had a song in her heart, and as she came that song had bubbled over on to her lips. She did not always feel like singing, because there was something in her life that made her sad if she thought about it too much. But "pulling a long face won't help one little bit," Peggy used to say, so she pulled a pleasant one.

Today, as she went she skipped along, for the sun was shining and in her hands was a bunch of daisies and dandelions gathered from a patch of grass she had found.

Suddenly she caught sight of the doll. At first she did not notice the label tied round its neck. She just saw its blue eyes and its lovely frilly dress and the whole marvel of its doll beauty as it stared smiling into Peggy's face.

How she would like a doll like that for her. What a doll—as big as a baby. But what was it doing there? What was that label on it? Whatever could it mean? Was that true?

And then Peggy's quick brain began to work. Perhaps it was to be presented to a princess.

A moment later, however, she knocked at Mr. Pemberton's door.

Mr. Pemberton saw her from behind his curtain; saw her clean but shabby dress, saw her merry, smiling eyes and her thin, pointed face rather like that of a merry elf, and the next moment he was listening to her voice as she gazed up at him in the open doorway.

"Please. I would like to know who that doll is for? Is it for a princess? Or is it just for anybody?"

Mr. Pemberton smiled at her. "How would you like it for yourself?"

And how surprised he was at her answer. "No, no," she cried. "Not for me: for her."

"For her?"

"For Rosemary, my sister. She can't walk; she has to go about on crutches; most days she's lying on a sofa," explained Peggy.

Mr. Pemberton looked grave; and then he smiled and picked up the doll.

The doll was so heavy, combined with the other little parcels, that Mr. Pemberton helped Peggy to carry them down the road; then down another, and down three more. At last, at the door of a little house they stopped and Peggy went in. Mr. Pemberton followed.

In the room they entered a little girl, a year younger than Peggy, was lying on a sofa turning the leaves of a much-worn book. When she saw Peggy, who went towards her with a little bunch of flowers, her face lighted as though the sun had suddenly thrown its rays upon her, but at the sight of the stranger she looked shy and bent her head. Then with excited hands Peggy took the long box from Mr. Pemberton and laid it close to her sister.

"For you," she cried, "from this gentleman!" And at the joy in their faces Mr. Pemberton turned away and blew his nose very hard; and then, after placing the other toys on a table near, he said "Good-bye" and hurried to the door. As he passed the window outside, his heart was warmed by laughter from within.

Mr. Pemberton had two regular habits now. One is visiting Peggy and her sister, the other is visiting bazaar.—My Magazine.

Sir Reginald Hart, V.C.

THE story of the life of a brave man is told by The Children's Newspaper of a late date. He was Sir Reginald Hart, V.C.

Many years full of honor were his, but, long as his life was, he never hesitated to risk it to save the life of another. The Victoria Cross he won over fifty years ago was awarded him for such a deed.

He was then a young engineer officer in the force Lord Roberts led through Afghanistan to Kandahar.

In the Khyber Pass a party of native cavalry were ambushed and rushed by the hill tribesmen. Young Hart, with his detachment, was behind, and without a moment's thought he rushed single-handed into the fray and stood over one of the riders who had been cut down. He drove off the Afghans and brought the man back into safety.

The True British Soldier

WHEN the Afghan War was over he went with Wolseley to Ashanti, but the troublesome Northwest Frontier of India was his chosen field, and there till the twentieth century came this fine old Victorian stayed and won increasing honor and esteem.

He was indeed brave, but not only in the heat of conflict. When a young man of twenty-one he was in France, and there he rescued a Frenchman from certain death in such circumstances that he gained a silver medal from the Royal Humane Society, while the French Government presented him with a medal of honor.

A quarter of a century later a clasp was added to his first medal by the Royal Humane Society, for he saved another man from drowning. An artilleryman was sinking in the muddy waters of the Ganges Canal near Roorkee when Colonel Hart jumped in and brought him safe to land.

Simple, kindly, courteous, it might have been said of this fine old gentleman that he was "as gentle as mercy, as fortitude brave," and that is the true British soldier.

Wild Animal Lore

By DAVID NEWELL

Marsh Deer (South America)

This large and handsome deer is found in pantanal, or marshy ground; He feeds in water four feet deep. But finds a knoll on which to sleep.

Below his knees his legs are black; He's rufous on his sides and back, But on his breast and flanks and throat He's marked with white, as you will note.

His name is Cervo in Brazilian, And he is found there by the million. (Exaggeration is no crime, And here it helps to make a rhyme!)

The natives kill him for his hide Which brings a dollar when it's dried. To us who live where deer are few, This seems a wasteful thing to do.

From Bell Boy to Nurse

Hey, Red Cap! Just Look After These for a While, Eh? Messenger Boys in England Apparently Have a Larger Scope of Duties Than on This Side of the Water.

One Way of Beautifying Victoria

IT was very gratifying to learn, a few weeks ago, that the big boys and girls were taking care that no litter should be scattered about their school grounds. It is hoped that younger children will follow that good example.

There must be left room on the school premises for games, but that is no reason why these spaces should not be clean and tidy. Indeed, it would not take long to surround the grounds with flowers or evergreen borders; but it would need both taste and trouble to keep either in order.

As one walks along the streets there are to be seen in some directions homes without lawns or front gardens. It is easy to believe that the busy mothers of little children have no time to make a garden or to keep it in order. But where there are boys and girls of from twelve to sixteen years of age in the home there is no such excuse.

In every district there are gardeners who would be only too glad to give away cuttings of shrubs or roots of perennials. The seeds of annuals do not cost much, and, tedious as the work of weeding and cultivating may be, it brings a rich reward in pleasure and satisfaction. It is not yet too late to prepare the soil for next Spring's planting.

If father is an expert gardener, as many fathers are, he will be glad of the help of his son or daughter to make his lovely garden lovelier still.

Perhaps some of you are thinking, "That is all very well, now that the rain is pouring down, but when midsummer comes, what becomes of all our labor? Many families cannot afford to pay the water charges, and it only takes a week or two of dry weather to ruin the prettiest bed or border."

Perhaps when summer comes this year the City Fathers will let gardeners have free or at least cheap, water. There is plenty of it, and no better way of beautifying Victoria has been thought of than that of adding hundreds of little flower gardens to its many splendid big ones.

A few generous people have gone outside their own gardens to adorn the boulevards with flowers. They have the thanks of every one, little or big, who passes.

Now that the chrysanthemums have come to make a chapter for the closing year, think whether you cannot help to strew the pathway of Spring and Summer with fresh and fragrant blossoms.

The King's Swans

EVERYONE will hope that the six swans His Majesty King George was kind enough to send to Elk Lake will arrive safely. No one will be allowed to shoot them there. If they are kindly treated, there should next Spring be many happy families swimming on the pretty lake. It was like our King to remember the children of his far-away subjects.

There are many fathers and mothers, as well as older people, who remember the lovely October day when, after a drive through the country, the Duke and Duchess of York (as the King and Queen were called then), drove through the crowded streets and noticed the little fellows that cheered as they passed.

Did the Duke drive by Elk Lake, and does His Majesty remember how lovely it looked that bright Autumn day? Everyone would like to know more about the story of the swans that have been sent to Victoria's Bird Sanctuary.

The present is a sign of the big, kind heart of the good man who has won the love of his millions of subjects at home and overseas.

The fishwives of Cullercoats, England, who have raised $6,268 for the Royal National Life Boat Institution in ten years, have contributed $885 this year, their record amount.

How Do You Speak?

NOT long ago a Canadian girl who had read and appreciated the poems of Tennyson, Keats, Wordsworth, and other poets, answered a question with "Yeah." If she had been of a different opinion, she might have said "Nope."

On all sides we hear "I'll tell the world," and "Sure thing" is common. There are many other expressions which boys and girls use that their fathers and mothers cannot understand.

It is time all young Canadians made up their minds about the language they are going to speak. The English tongue is ours by inheritance. It can express every fact, thought and feeling. To it can be added many good new words as they are needed. Electricity, the aeroplane, the radio and other inventions have given us many such words.

Each game has a little vocabulary of its own. So long as a word has a real meaning it has its place. But before we use any word we should be sure that it has a meaning and that there is not an English word that will express our thought.

"The tongue that Shakespeare spoke" is the heritage of Canada, as it is of Great Britain and the United States, and, it is thought, it may become a world-wide language. Each of us can do something to preserve it.

The Little Yellow Friend

THE gorse is with us still; indeed, it is not always out! Here and there a gorse bush in flower can be found at most seasons.

When the heather joins the gorse in flowering the moors are an unforgettable study in purple and gold. In all nature's gardening one feels nothing could surpass that glory.

Thus does nature with some of her greatest triumphs in most exposed places. These wild gardens of gorse are an amazing achievement. It is inspiring to remember that, in face of the wild buffeting of wind and storm on cliff and moor, gorse and heather can win their way to such wealth of glory. For theirs is no mere survival but an ample and overwhelming victory. It is like the fullness of a great music, a veritable Hallelujah Chorus of blossom.

Gorse is cousin to the little yellow clover, and in its beginning it is a gentle, inoffensive little trefol. Originally spineless and unarm'd, out of necessity has come its threatening aspect. The little trefol changes quickly into a sturdy and defiant growth, ready for an exposed and difficult life. Its final beauty is the flower of hardihood.—My Magazine.

Mr. Fraser, of Uclulet has shown that heather, as well as gorse, will flourish on Vancouver Island. Will some of our country readers try to introduce it to waste places near their school houses?

A Gallant Rescue

ALL boys in Victoria, and girls, too, should be proud of Jack Kirkendale. His courage, skill and presence of mind saved the life of a little girl who slipped into the water on Remembrance Day. That he was too modest to wait for praise adds to the worth of his action. It is good to know that we have young people among us who are of the stuff of which heroes have always been made. It is hoped Jack will excuse us for writing about the deed which he called "nothing." It is good for us all to think about it and him.

True Success

I look on that man as happy who, when there is question of success, looks into his work for a reply, not into the market, not into opinion, not into patronage.—Emerson.

Punch—Story of a Sea Gull

By MRS. H. CLAYTON

BETTY and Robin were walking along the cliffs one morning when they met Jim, the coastguard's son.

"Look what I've got for you, missy," said Jim. He opened his coat and showed a young sea gull.

"Oh, Jim!" cried both children, "how did you get it?"

"Scrambling along the cliffs," answered Jim. "I was after eggs and found a nest with three young 'uns. The others got away but I caught this one. He's a herring-gull, one of the biggest of the common gulls."

"Will he stay that speckly brown color?" asked Robin.

"No," said Jim. "When he's grown up his feathers will be white with grey markings. He'll do a wonderful lot of good in the garden, eating slugs and snails and such like. The gardener'll be glad to have him."

Betty clapped her hands. "We'll call him 'Punch,'" she cried.

"May I carry him, Jim?" said Robin, eagerly. "Better put him inside your coat," advised Jim. "He's only a little 'un, but his beak is strong, and he can give you a nasty nip if he gets the chance."

Punch seemed quite happy in his new home. When he grew bigger his wings were clipped so that he should not fly away, but he had the fun of the large garden and plenty to eat, as, besides slugs and insects, cook gave him scraps from the house, which he much enjoyed.

When he was full-grown he was very handsome, with his white plumage and yellow beak. He seemed to know it, too, for he would strut about the garden as if the whole place belonged to him. He was quite fearless, and even dogs would run away from him when he rushed at them hissing and snapping his strong curved beak. No doubt they wondered what sort of queer creature he was.

"Good as a watch-dog," chuckled the old gardener.

Bare legs had a great fascination for him, and when Betty and Robin's little friends came to play with them Punch had to be shut up. He was fond of his little master and mistress but did not like strangers.

One day Betty's mother bought some baby chicks. She put them under a wire on the lawn. When dinner was over she and Betty went out to look at them. To their horror they found three of the little birds lying dead inside the run. Outside on the grass lay their poor little heads, cut right off!

"Oh, oh!" said Betty, "who could have done it?"

No one was in sight and neither Robin nor the gardener knew anything about it.

"We must watch," said Mrs. Grey.

So she and Betty hid behind a bush. They had not been there long when Punch came strolling down a path. He saw the cage, stopped, and put his head on one side.

"Hallo, there you are!" he seemed to say. Then he marched across the grass and stood close beside it.

In a little while a chicken popped its head out through the wire netting. Tweak! In a moment it was off.

Out rushed Betty and Mrs. Grey, just in time to save the life of another chick. Punch was chased away, but Mrs. Grey said that in future he must be kept in the kitchen garden, where he could do no harm.

The Sauba or Parasol Ants

IN the November number of My Magazine there is a description of the work of the Sauba or umbrella ants, based on the report of Henry Walter Bates. From it we take the following paragraphs of one of nature's wonders.

It might be a little dangerous to speak politely of the Saubas in the hearing of a South American, for in areas under cultivation by the growers of coffee, oranges, lemons and other fruits the ants are an almost ruinous pest. If a Sauba ant were brought to the bar of justice, as in medieval days so many animals and insects were, and charged with the destruction of the crops, the defence to be offered for them would be that they had been cutting, carrying, harvesting and cultivating since days before the appearance of the first man upon the earth. Cultivation by human art has invaded them, not they cultivation. What is it, then, that they do?

In their colossal underground cities they have range upon range of storehouses, each one awaiting its load of vegetation, and each load to be the foundation of a crop on which the ants feed and live. The ants sally forth thousands, tens of thousands, strong, and flanked on each side by their warriors, march to the trees on which coffee berries or oranges or lemons are growing.

The workers climb the trees and swarm up the leaves. These they cut through with their powerful toothed mandibles and, with a jerk of the head, break off the severed piece and either drop it down to gangs waiting below or themselves descend the trees and march back by the way they came to their fastnesses.

Each piece of leaf cut out is about the size of a shingle, and is carried tilted over the head in the form of a natural parasol, a fact which gives the popular name to the Sauba ants. Other creatures, animal and insect, carry home spoil in this way and charge their barns and receptacles with them, but here the harvest is only a beginning. The leaves themselves are not the ant's food. Multitudes of workers carry the fragments down below, mould them into little balls, and stack them head upon head until each compartment receives a mass of leaf which is about as large as a man's head.

Now some wizard alchemy is set in train. Whether the spore are introduced by the ants, or are already on the leaves or latent underground, we do not know; but it is undoubtedly a fact that every fragment of leaf deposited in these subterranean barns produces a fungus; and that fungus is the staff of life on which the Saubas depend. Rising temperature, fermentation, and the passage of time do the work of food production here as surely as the efforts of man bring fertility and due harvest to the smiling fields of England.

"When the Swallows Homeward Fly"

IT is many weeks since the last of the swallows left British Columbia. Did those swift wings hear them safely to warmer lands?

English and continental papers on the other side of the Atlantic Ocean tell us that thousands of these birds were caught in the storms on the Alps, the Apennines, and other mountain ranges.

Some of them were rescued by aeroplanes. In Venice some of these were landed, warmed, and then carried still farther south to Turkey and Africa.

Others were picked up almost frozen and taken on board trains by compassionate conductors. It all seems very wonderful; but is the marvel greater than that these and other birds should year after year fly safely to their summer homes across mountain, sea and plain for thousands of miles?

To the Moon

Queen and huntress, chaste and fair,
Now the sun is laid to sleep,
Seated in thy silver chair,
State in wonted manner keep;
Hesperus entreats thy light,
Goddess, excellently bright.

Earth, let not thy envious shade
Dare itself to interpose;
Cynthia's shining orb was made
Heaven to clear, when day did close:
Bless us then with wished sight,
Goddess, excellently bright.

Lay thy bow of pearl apart,
And thy crystal shining quiver;
Give unto the flying hart
Space to breathe, how short soever:
Thou that makest day of night,
Goddess, excellently bright.

PUZZLE CORNER

Earning and Saving

A man who was earning seventy-five shillings a week was able to save a fifth of his wages. He emigrated to America, where he obtained work at a salary which was a third more than his original one, but at the same time his expenses increased by five-twelfths. Was his emigration a financial advantage or a disadvantage?

Diagonal Acrostic

Fill in the letters across to make the words described. When this has been done correctly the central diagonal line, represented by noughts, will make the name of the shortest month.

○ One who flees.
○ Recall to mind.
○ Titled class.
○ Soldiers' lodgings.
○ Holder of degree.
○ Large hill.
○ Guests.
○ Compassion.

Shuffled Names

The groups of letters below contain the names of a bird, a reptile, and an invertebrate creature, each of nine letters.

Three letters from each are included in each of the groups, and these letters have been taken as they stand and then rearranged.

For example, supposing one of the words to be Cormorant, the letters COR, MOR, and ANT would appear together, but not in that sequence.

L I E O R C F I T
Y A R S A C S O W
D E E N C D O G

Word Square

The following five clues indicate five words which, when written one below the other, will form a square of words.

Vital organ of the body. Béqueth. Old saying. Villain. Kind of cloth.

FOR PARIS, FIFTH AVENUE AND MAIN STREET

coat interest centres in the regions above the belt. Unique cuff arrangements and big collars on both models put the shoulders into prominence.

Marcel Rochas' yellow wool dress assumes a jacket appearance by having a bias piece sewed on just above the waist. Yes, you guessed right, it is one of those soft, diagonal-weave wools. The two ruffles on the sleeves give it unusual distinction.

What appears to be fur epaulettes on the shoulders of Augustabernard's black cloth coat are really the ends of a tiny cape that fits the shoulders snugly in the back. The long strip of black Persian lamb that goes all the way down the front, continues on around the neck and wraps around itself at the front.

Vionnet's attractive dark red street frock is entirely innocent of any collar, and even the belt is only a buckle that fastens two tabs at the front. The dress fits snugly and falls into fullness just at the knees. It closes in a double-breasted triangle effect with one huge button.

The green suit is one of Chanel's popular jacket models. There is a striped jersey

The Parisian woman's pet combination is black and white. Lelong caters to it at the right with a black velvet skirt and white wool jacket. The collar, jabot and cuffs are of supple black flat fur, and big black buttons and a black enameled belt buckle carry the color scheme to a finish.

Pictured on this page are typical garments for street wear, all gleaned from the most recent collections. They give you a very definite idea of what Paris is suggesting for all-around daytime wear this season.

Seeing London

LAWYERS form a remarkably large proportion of the membership of the new House of Commons, the percentage being higher than ever before. In 1404, when Henry IV called a Parliament at Coventry, lawyers were excluded, and it earned the name of Parliament of Dunces, and the Lawless and Unlearned Parliament.

The new Parliament consists of 136 lawyers, no fewer than thirty-two of whom are King's Counsel; thirty heirs of peers and holders of courtesy titles, eighteen doctors and surgeons, about a dozen bankers and half a dozen ex-schoolmasters.

Scientists in the House include Dr. G. C. Clayton, of the Fuel Research Board; H. C. Haslam, a bio-chemist, and A. E. L. Chorlton, distinguished in engineering. Literature's chief representative is John Buchan, and Sir Alfred Butt stands for the theatre. Two members are associated with the film industry.

Sport will have some distinguished representatives. Viscount Knebworth and Lord Clydesdale are well-known amateur boxers. Lord Burghley is a champion hurdler and holder of the Olympic record at 400 metres.

There are fourteen women members of the new Parliament, of whom four, the Duchess of Atholl, Lady Astor, Lady Iveagh and Miss Megan Lloyd George have sat before. Among the newcomers is the Hon. Mary Pickford, serious and horn-spectacled, and not at all like her famous namesake. She is a daughter of Lord Stendale, and has been engaged in public life from early girlhood.

Brick Court Luminaries

AMONG the lesser byways of Fleet Street is Brick Court, in the Middle Temple, a tiny backwater which has literary associations of world-wide interest.

The Court was so named because in Queen Elizabeth's reign the first brick buildings in the Temple were erected there. A century afterwards they were badly damaged by a fire, which the resident lawyers strove to extinguish by drenching it with beer from the Temple buttries. This was not, however, because they favored prohibition, but because the Thames was frozen over and they could not get any water.

Oliver Goldsmith lived at No. 2 Brick Court and wrote some of his most famous works there. Among his visitors were Dr. Johnson, Reynolds and other notable figures of his time, including Jessamy Bride, the young girl whose friendship and whose family gave Goldsmith many happy hours in his later years.

It was here, on the day of his funeral, that the stairways were crowded with the outcasts he had befriended.

Lord Mayor's Residence

THE Mansion House, that grey and austere official residence of the Lord Mayors of London, which by its vast size must overawe the strongest-minded Lady Mayores, has been redecorated and restored.

New and glorious floodlighting throws into relief the ceilings, in which effects hidden for 200 years behind layers of paint have been newly brought out, and Lady Jenks, the new Lady Mayoress, has no fault to find with the ivory, blue and gold color schemes of the ground floor rooms, nor the brown and crushed strawberry of the bedrooms, all the fittings, furniture and decoration of which are British.

In the great Egyptian Hall, now one of the most beautiful reception rooms in the country, loud speakers have been cunningly hidden in wrought-ironwork between the pillars, and a further innovation which should appeal to all future Lord Mayors is the addition of a private roof garden.

In the basement the cells—for this unique building combines residence, police court and prison—are painted a bilious yellow, but the little court itself is now a cheerful blue.

The total cost of renovation is estimated at $400,000. The original building, which was finished in 1758, cost $275,000.

Living Autograph Album

THE only living autograph album in the world resides in the London Zoo. He is Percy, biggest and best of rhinoceroses, whose incredibly tough hide bears indelible proof of his many acquaintances. His sides are covered with initials and autographs, carved on him during the last ten years by scores of zoo visitors, who have wielded anything from a penknife to a pin.

Among Percy's more famous autographs is one by Jack Dempsey, and he also "owns" a delicately carved crest implanted by a member of an aristocratic family, who paid many a mouthful in order to work with his chisel. Many of the initials mark the identity of well-known people who could not resist honoring Percy.

Spent Thirty-Five Years Hunting Similes

FRANK J. Wilstach is a hunter of similes. For more than thirty-five years he has been pursuing them through boundless tracts of magazines and newspapers.

Big game hunters mount their trophies on walls of their libraries. But Wilstach has mounted his in a book. He published it some time ago and it is still in demand, having run through nearly a dozen printings.

An explosion that shook the downtown section of Boston back in 1895 started Wilstach on his unique hobby. Reading the reports of the accidents in the newspapers, he noticed the expression: "The news spread like wildfire," figuring in each of the papers, and spoke of this to a friend who was a reporter.

"Is that the only way news spreads?"

"It's the only way I have ever heard of it spreading," was the reply.

"Well, I'll find other ways," Wilstach retorted. In a short time he had more than forty different similes expressing the idea, ranging from "like oil on water" to "like measles in a country school."

Since that day Wilstach has extended his simile explorations through 40,000 volumes, and from them garnered upward of 20,000 specimens. They range from the brilliant to the ludicrous, but there are a few that are not startling and terse. Out of the lot of them is one that Wilstach considers the most arresting he has found. It was written thirty years ago by an anonymous sports writer on a Chicago paper, and has it that the crowd at a baseball game "made as much noise as a human skeleton having a fit on a hardwood floor."

Like all collectors, Wilstach condemns the public's lack of interest in his chosen field. Most of our similes reflect shallow thinking, he says, and two that are overworked more than any are: "Hard as a rock" and "Proud as a peacock." However, he feels that there is a growing interest in good similes, and for this reason each year makes public the cream of discoveries.

President Despite Wife

Juan Esteban Montero is president of Chile today in spite of his wife. She insisted that he ought to keep out of politics and take care of his four children, but he was nominated and has just been elected anyway. Senior Montero was a radical, later made Conservative by responsibility. He is a former professor of law.
